A black and white photograph of two young boys sitting on a carpeted floor, focused on building a structure with wooden sticks and beads. The boy on the left is wearing a plaid shirt and suspenders, while the boy on the right is wearing a striped shirt and suspenders. They are both holding sticks and beads, and a partially assembled structure stands between them. A tin can lies on the floor to the left. The background is a simple indoor setting.

SAGAPONACK.....

Hot Potato

Sagaponack, Oh Beautiful for Spacious Skies From Sea to Shining Sea

By Dan Rattiner

When the hamlet of Sagaponack voted last year to become an official Incorporated Village, the whole idea was that it really would not cost much money. Village residents pay two sets of taxes, one to the village and one to the town. But this would be a light-on-its-feet village, with all services contracted out, with no village hall and no police station or court house. 285 people voted in favor of such a village. Only 11 opposed. What a landslide.

In many ways, however, those who are now running the village, the new Mayor and the four Trustees, are like little kids being presented with a big chocolate cake. They've been told to each take just a little tiny piece. Sure.

At the weekly meeting of the Village Board, held not in the Mayor's living room but in the new Village Building on the Montauk Highway on the southwest corner of Sagg Main they have reluctantly agreed to take on, the topic of the day was the Official Village Seal. One has to have a Village Seal. All the other Incorporated Villages in the Town of Southampton have a Village Seal. They are all on display, one next to another, on a wall in the courtroom of Southampton Town.

"We want to have the most beautiful seal,"

one of the councilmen said.

Two designs were on the table. One showed a vista of a potato farm, the other showed a giant potato in the sky hovering over some generic farmland. Beneath this potato in the sky, strange and powerful rays could be seen emitting downward toward the rich fields below. Sagaponack was under the benevolent protection of this tuber.

"Potato farming is our heritage," said some potatoes," said Lee Foster, whose family farmed potatoes for generations and still does. And lest we forget, the word "Sagaponack" means potato in Algonquin. Everybody knows that.

At first, the Village Board seemed to lean toward the potato in the sky design. It was dramatic enough. It would be a real eye catcher. But there was something not quite right about it.

At first, the Village Board seemed to lean toward the potato in the sky design. It was dramatic enough. It would be a real eye catcher.

"It's a perfectly nice potato," said the Mayor, "but in black and white like that, it just doesn't look like a potato."

"It's hard to draw a potato looking like a potato," somebody said. And indeed it is. Potatoes, when in the sky, can be mistaken for many things. Clouds, for example.

"It looks like, well, something else," one of the other councilmen said.

In this case, the way it was drawn, it didn't look like either a potato or a cloud. It looked, how shall one say this, like a giant piece of dog poop with magical rays shining down out of it. What would people make of that?

"Maybe we should consider the other entry, the one with the scene of the potato fields," said another councilman.

Trustee Lee Foster. And that was true enough. Potato farming goes back hundreds of years, though it is true that most of the potato farms have already been cut up for huge summer mansions. Maybe putting a potato field on the seal would stop them. Surely a giant potato in the sky emitting rays would stop them.

"I love potatoes," said Mayor Bill Tillotson.

"Every meal I prepare for my family has

"Yes."

Ms. Foster said that she was still waiting to hear back from Jack DeRosa. He is a well known graphic designer who lives in Sagaponack. She had spoken to him and he had promised to come up with a choice of five different ideas for the Village Seal. He'd be calling her back any day now. She suggested that they table this matter until they saw what he could do.

Other councilpeople, however, pressed the case for one or the other of the two entries and so it was decided to take a vote. There were two votes for the potato farm. And two votes for the big turd in the sky. Mr. Tillotson, the Mayor, therefore, was presented with a deadlock, which meant that he could cast the final and deciding vote.

"I'd like to think about this," he said. "I'm wavering." He suggested that because he was wavering, the Board should table the matter until the next meeting. And so that was what was done. Two votes to two, and one not voting. They will discuss the matter again.

Coming up at the next meeting are some other matters. The Village was indeed formed to be light-on-its-feet and after the vote there was the vote for Mayor. Bill Tillotson ran on a platform of not having a Village Zoning Board of Appeals but relying on the Southampton Town ZBA for all its decisions as in the past. And he won the Mayoral contest against Gary Ireland, who ran on the idea that Sagaponack SHOULD have its own Zoning Board. This was about the only thing that separated the positions of these candidates.

But now, with the cake on the table, they are considering doing their own zoning anyway. Having a Village ZBA would provide much more "community oriented" decisions than would the current Southampton Town Board ZBA, one of the councilpeople said. They would think about it.

There was also the matter of having their own police force and having their own highway department. And now they'd have to set up a Village Accounting System and so to do that they would need an auditor. And also, of course, a Village Attorney.

On the other hand, there loom the issues of coming up with a village bird, a village song, a village emblem for the side of the police cars and a village flag to put on the flagpole that someday they will put up in front of the new Village Building. It seems that in the paperwork involved with the State of New York in creating a Village, the bureaucrats in Albany want to fill in spaces on the form where it says bird, flag and song.

Not to worry.

"One thing at a time," said Mrs. Foster •

Albert Einstein and friend, summer 1939

Under Surveillance

The FBI Watched Einstein Closely As He Vacationed Here in 1939

By Dan Rattiner

Albert Einstein spent the summer of 1939 vacationing on the East End. He rented a cabin on Nassau Point in Southold, bought a small catboat and spent his days either working on his theories or sailing along in his little boat on the gentle waters of Peconic Bay. In the evenings he read, or he played classical music on his violin, often with some of the locals in a string quartet that he organized. He was far better than everyone else, but that didn't matter. It was a social evening and everyone had a good time.

At the time, Einstein was 60 years old. He was divorced, working on his various theories at Princeton during the school year, and accompanied by his faithful secretary, Helen Dukas, who was handling his affairs. At some point during that summer, he was visited for a few weeks by his daughter, Margot, who was grown and married and living in New York City at that time.

Probably the most remarkable thing that Einstein did during that summer was to write a letter to President Franklin Roosevelt. At the time, Einstein was one of this country's most well known celebrities. His Theory of Relativity, published in Germany in November 1915, was considered a crackpot of an idea until, four years later, observations of a solar eclipse showed that he was absolutely correct. Subsequently, he expressed views supporting pacificism and intellectual cooperation. He joined with Gandhi in publishing a manifesto against compulsory military service. By the summer of 1939 he had fled Hitler and taken up residence in Princeton.

It is for all of these above reasons that the letter Einstein wrote to the President, and it and Poland, were trying to develop an atomic bomb. Should they do so, they told Einstein, the Germans would be able to blow up entire cities in a single stroke. It was imperative that the United States fund an effort to do so before Hitler did.

What could be more effective to get this done than a letter from America's most prominent scientist, an avowed pacifist, to the President of the United States? Einstein agreed, and the letter was sent. President Roosevelt acted within months after receiving it, ordering an effort to create such a bomb at a secret mountain hideaway in Tennessee at a place called Oak Ridge. We all know what happened after that.

This story is worth mentioning at this particular time because a copy of this letter was recently found in a file at the FBI as part of the release of documents from a request through the Freedom of Information Act. That the letter existed was well known. That it was in a thick file folder marked ALBERT EINSTEIN in the branch of the FBI that keeps suspected enemies of the state under surveillance was not. Albert Einstein was being watched by agents of J. Edgar Hoover while he was vacationing was widely reported, caused such a sensation at the time.

In August of that year, two prominent scientists, Leo Szilard and Eugene Wigner, came out to visit Einstein in Nassau Point. World War II had not yet begun. But these scientists presented to Einstein evidence that the Germans, who had recently walked over Czechoslovakia and were threatening France

Driving Different Roads from East Hampton to Bridgehampton

By Dan Rattiner

Every morning, I drive from East Hampton to Bridgehampton to get to work. It takes maybe twenty minutes. The route involves driving down Three Mile Harbor Road to North Main Street, then either driving through downtown East Hampton and then up Route 27 to Bridgehampton, or turning right from Three Mile Harbor Road onto Cedar Street and then up to Steven Hands Path, then down Steven Hands to the Montauk Highway, then west to Bridgehampton.

This second option is longer, but sometimes seems like it might be faster. The deciding factors are whether I think there are traffic tie ups downtown and whether I get caught at the traffic lights at Cedar and Three Mile Harbor. If I get caught there, I can make the right. Right on Red. So I go this back way. Nine times out of ten I go that back way.

I bring this up at this time because I've noticed something very odd lately about going the back way up Cedar and down Steven Hands.

As I said, about nine times out of ten, I take the back way. But now, with the town not as crowded as it is in the summertime, I've been going with more frequency through downtown. I think downtown is especially pretty this time of year.

The odd thing has to do with cell phone service. On this drive to work, I make phone calls. I've always done this. I do it legally. I have a Bluetooth device for my ear and the cell phone stays in my pocket while I talk. I seem to be blithering away at nothing is what it must look like to the oncoming motorists.

Anyway, there's a dead spot on this drive, a place where the phone service collapses. It used to go out when I used AT&T and it still goes out with Verizon. On my journey it begins about a hundred yards down Steven Hands right after it crosses Route 114. And it doesn't

BLACKBERRIES, LEONARDO & ANNA AND THE SUPREMES

By Dan Rattiner

There are three very interesting courtroom dramas going on right now. It's the sort of stuff like this that builds case law and makes America the envy of the civilized world. Any kid wondering what he ought to do for a living ought to consider being a lawyer.

First there is Anna Nicole Smith and the Supremes. Important new legal ground will be broken depending upon which side the justices come down on.

J. Howard Marshall, a Texas investor, made a fortune buying and selling stocks in the stock market during the 1970s. By 1994, he was worth an estimated $1.2 billion when he met and married a topless dancer named Anna Nicole Smith. He was 89. She was 26. Marshall's regular family, before he met Smith, had all been divorced by him or had passed away, except for a son named Pierce. Marshall felt free to lavish his affections on his young bride. Her real name, by the way, was Vickie Lynn. He wrote her into his will. Or anyway, since he had everything in trust funds and separate corporations and was battling the IRS all the time, he wrote her in through some separate document.

A year later he died. And immediately, son

Pierce moved in, fired the lawyer handling his dad's affairs, hired one of his own and, according to Anna, burned all paperwork referring to her.

As the will went into probate, Pierce simply closed out all of Anna's checkbooks. With several homes to take care of and no income, she declared bankruptcy, which is a Federal matter. Meanwhile, Pierce filed papers in Texas state court, which is where probate gets taken care of.

The Feds came up with a decision first. They ruled that Anna was entitled to $475 million, end until you get to Twice Upon a Bagel in Wainscott, a distance of four miles, or, without traffic, about six minutes. Big deal. So what I do is start making my phone calls when I pull out of the driveway of my home, stop the calls when I get about halfway up Cedar and then try to begin making them again when I get to Twice Upon a Bagel. It's important for purposes of this story to note that the last part of this blackout, this two miles at the very end of my shortcut, is along the Montauk Highway.

In the past, I have confirmed that this dead zone exists for the two miles on the Montauk Highway because when I go through downtown, the phone service drops out just before the intersection of Steven Hands and Montauk Highway. The loss is just half as long. So if I have a lot of calls to make, I go through town, even if there is traffic in town. The pause until I can use the phone again is shorter.

This past week, however, I noticed something really, really strange. If I take the shortcut, the whole four miles is a blackout space. But if I go through town, the service holds. There is no loss of service at all.

The first time I experienced this, I thought I must be dreaming. But in subsequent trips I have confirmed it. If you stay on the Montauk Highway the whole way, going through downtown East Hampton, the service is continuous. The back way, the service drops out at the end of Cedar Street, but does not pick back up when you reach the Montauk Highway. The service remains dead those last two miles. This is, specifically, the space where you have the Perelman Estate, the Airport Turnoff, Almondito Restaurant and the WWII Tank Memorial, Saracen, Georgica Antiques, Pethampton and all the way to Twice Upon a Bagel.

This makes no sense.

At first I thought it must be some kind of lag effect. Going from east to west, coming through town, I have this strong signal and it begins to drop off when you get to the intersection with Steven Hands, but by the time it's about to go out at Twice Upon a Bagel it picks up again. It must have something to do with the speed that you traverse through this two miles.

This makes no sense either, but I really liked the idea. I'm heading up Cedar Street and the service goes out. I get back down to the Montauk Highway with the service out and it just sputters and sputters and can't catch until, finally, it picks up a strong signal at Twice Upon. Meanwhile, if I barrel through town, especially if I barrel through at a good pace, I have enough speed to carry me through in time.

Since this made no sense, I came up with a second explanation. I thought maybe it had something to do with the angle of the car in relationship to the telephone signal. Coming down Steven Hands, you are at about a 45 degree angle to the Montauk Highway. The signal would be fine if we were parallel. But we're not. This makes no sense either.

My latest theory, and this DOES make sense, at least partial sense, is that it has to do with the drop off in traffic we are experiencing at this time of year because it's out of season. The part of this that does make sense is that a drop off in traffic does improve service. How many of us have noticed — I am one — that in the summertime on a Friday evening, when the huge crowds of visitors come down the Montauk Highway bumper to bumper from New York City, the service breaks down entirely? Here you have five thousand car drivers, all with cell phones, all calling at the same time. "We're here." The service collapses. From about 2 pm until 10 pm it's almost impossible to get a line.

The part of this that STILL doesn't make sense is how come the service collapses when you come at it from Steven Hands, but it doesn't collapse when you go straight down the highway from the east? Same group of stores. Same place. Different result.

Five years ago, the cell phone service was just fine. Not everybody had cell phones then. The cell phone towers were quite sufficient. I do recall back then there was just one spot where you lost service. It was along Sagaponack Road between Ocean Avenue and Sagg Main, right where it passes the Kennedy Compound. You just couldn't make a cell phone call from there. You still can't. Imagine that. The home where Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg lives, where JFK Jr. lived, where

Dominy House, when it was located on North Main Street, East Hampton

Saving Them

Saving Three Historic Buildings in East Hampton and Southampton

By David Lion Rattiner

For three incredibly historically significant structures, one in Southampton and two in East Hampton, an effort to get them restored for the public is underway. The history behind them justifies the effort.

The first house is the Henry Rhodes House located at 22 Windmill Lane in Southampton. The home was originally built at the corner of Hampton Road and Main Street. Local and national historians estimate that the house was built somewhere between 1744 and 1799 where it remained all the way until the 1920s. It was not until then that it was moved because Town Hall, well, the former Town Hall, got built in that spot. (Today it is Saks Fifth Avenue. So the next time you are shopping there in Southampton, you can think to yourself that somebody else, a long time ago, was standing in that same place, only they weren't purchasing high end clothing, they were most likely paying a speeding horse buggy ticket.)

The history of the home does not end with the move from where Saks Fifth Avenue is, however. After the move in the 1920s, the house underwent many different renovations, upgrades and facelifts. It was, at various times, a hotel, a multifamily residence, a speakeasy and even a brothel. It personified the good old days of the Hamptons you could say.

But today, down on Windmill Lane, where it is now located, for lack of a better word, it is dying. The historic structure was condemned by the village and was even scheduled for complete demolition in 2003, but historians voiced their opposition to its destruction and were able to save it. Since then it has been good for pretty much nothing. Luckily, we have two res-

Michael Edward Charrier, Alfred Callahan and Michael Tortorice to discuss possibilities for what the building could do for the village. History experts have claimed that this house is one of the best examples of 18th century design in Southampton and the Stradas see the importance of that. They plan on doing anything to the place, other than to knock it down, and they also hope to restore the entire house so that it will be its original self. One of the ways they could do this is by literally stripping off all of the stuff that has been built onto it in the 20th century. The property where the house is located is zoned for commercial use and can be developed so all the puzzle pieces are there. The Stradas say they are going to work with the village to see what can be developed and what businesses they can do. Whether or not this will actually happen remains to be seen, but the Stradas are very serious and

It most likely will not become a brothel again, but it will most likely revitalize the area on Windmill Lane idents in Amagansett, Robert Strada and Michelle Murphy Strada who are going to change that.

The couple has said that they are going to purchase the building and turn it into something, anything, as long as the Village of Southampton approves of it. They recently had a meeting with the village's architectural review board, which consists of John Zuccarelli, have a history of restoring building. Recently they renovated a 19th century house in Sag Harbor and Mr. Strada works as a consultant for Princeton University on historic renovations of the university's older buildings. It most likely will not become a brothel again, but it will most likely revitalize the area on Windmill Lane, which has noticeable empty story fronts.

Over in East Hampton, two other historic houses are going to survive. The Dominy family, who used to have a home on North Main Street, had two adjoining shops, a woodworking shop and a clock shop that were in business in the 1800s on their property. The Town of East Hampton is now looking into saving the two shops.

The Dominy house was built in the mid-18th century and the separate clock shop was built in early 1800. The shops remained on North Main Street in East Hampton until 1946, and then were moved to Further Lane by Dudley Roberts, who kept the buildings intact.

The history of this building is just amazing. You can trace this house back to the Dominy family, who were original Bonackers, and it shows up in East Hampton in 1659, which was just 11 years after the actual founding of the Town of East Hampton. After the building of their shop and home, the Dominys became legendary for their craftsmanship, cabinetmaking, clock making and furniture making. Nathaniel Dominy IV and Nathaniel V were well-respected coffin makers as well. The son of Nathaniel V, Felix, became a clockmaker and general metal worker who repaired jewelry and watches. The shop that this family ran is thought to be the only surviving 18th-century woodworking shop in the country. You can just see the family in your mind, working hard under the lantern light, putting together furniture and cabinets and then heading out to go fishing after work. One of their best customers was John Lyon Gardiner (relative to Robert David Lion Gardiner and David Lion Gardiner of Gardiner's Island. This writer thinks they have pretty cool names).

The buildings have remained on oceanfront property on Further Lane and their current owner, Chris Brown, has given the Village of East Hampton a head nod. The village has now expressed interest in bringing the shops back to North Main Street and last week hires Robert Hefner, a historic preservation consultant, to look into the viability of actually going about doing this and the best possible way of restoring them. They then plan on setting up the shops as close to the originals as possible so that visitors can see what it was like to be a craftsman during the 18th century, in the exact same spot where those craftsmen actually worked. They would also be able to find original tools, clocks, chairs, historic photographs and machinery, which the historical society owns and which are also owned by private individuals.

The Hamptons is an area so deep, rich and interesting in history that it is almost impossible to fail to appreciate it. But not all areas are as lucky in maintaining so many historical landmarks. After all, development and growth are a part of life and the old saying, "out with the old and in with the new" is very often the norm. But sometimes the old way of doing things is the right way to go.

which was the calculation of about half of Howard's estate. Then the State court ruled. They ruled that Anna was entitled to nothing.

And so Anna appealed to U. S. District Judge David O. Carter. He ruled that indeed Pierce Marshall had illegally seized the estate and fleeced it, and, in an extraordinary departure from an ordinary ruling, suggested that the authorities look into Pierce to see if he ought to be indicted. The judge also ruled that Pierce, as a civil matter, should pay Anna $88.5 million in damages, which would be the half the amount Howard had enriched himself during the one year he was married to Anna. It wasn't half of everything, he had meant. It was half of everything he added to his fortune while they were married. Still pretty good change.

"The court is convinced of his love for her," Carter wrote. "J. Howard referred to Vickie as the 'light of my life' and the lady that saved his life. His relationship with her provided the happiest moments of his last few years.....There is no question that he showered her with gifts, that he sought to protect her and provide for her."

Pierce appealed THAT ruling. And four months ago, a Federal appeals court ruled that Judge Carter had overstepped Federal Authority by ruling in a State matter. So they threw Carter's ruling out.

So now it's on to the Supreme Court. What wins? Bankruptcy or Probate? Federal Law or State Law?

The second interesting lawsuit at the moment is an attempt by two authors to stop the premiere of the movie The Da Vinci Code. The movie, which will star Tom Hanks, is based on the wildly successful book The Da Vinci Code published by Random House and written by author Dan Brown. In it, Brown puts forward the hypothesis that Jesus married Mary Magdalene and they had a child, whose bloodline survives to this day.

An interesting thought. But before there was the book The Da Vinci Code there was the book Holy Blood, Holy Grail, also published by Random House and written by co-authors Michael Baigent and Richard Leigh. And in that book, which is written as non-fiction, they advance the hypothesis that Jesus married Mary Magdalene and they had a child whose bloodline survives to this day.

If it's non-fiction, can it be copyrighted? If it can, do Baigent and Leigh have rights to a part of the pie? But then, Baigent and Leigh also put forward the hypothesis in their book that Christ did not die on the cross but lived later in France. Hmmm. The matter is to be decided in a court in London.

Finally, there is the matter of the Blackberries. I wake up every morning and look at mine. It still has my e-mail on it. Whew.

The deal here is that there is an American firm called NTP, which apparently doesn't do anything but copyright things and then wait around for somebody to come up with the same idea later and then pounce on them when they make a success out of it. As you may know, the U. S. Patent office has become, of late, very liberal in its giving out of patents. You can make a drawing showing an apple falling from a tree and hitting the ground and after that, any time an apple falls from a tree and somebody makes a buck they have to give you half.

In this case, the company that made the success out of this was called Research in Motion or RIM. Three million people are using Blackberry wireless telephones today. Including me.

NTP filed a lawsuit against RIM early on, at a time when it might have been settled for a few million dollars. But RIM stiffarmed NTP. NTP hadn't done any work. And they had. See you in court.

It has roamed around in the courts now for two years and NTP keeps winning and RIM

Mud Wrestling from LIU Southampton to SUNY Southampton

By Christian McLean

What's new with LIU? Let's face it, the situation at Southampton College is like reality TV. Tune in next week to find out what wacky antics those folks are up to. A few weeks back, they were telling the students from their MFA writing program that they would soon be moving the program to LIU's campus in Brooklyn.

This clearly didn't sit well with anyone in the program, practically all of whom call the East End home. A meeting between LIU and the students was held, but after it was over, there was new confusion. The new university taking over, SUNY Stony Brook, was offering its own program. What about that? (Robert Reeves from the old program had signed on with Stony Brook. Roger Rosenblatt will apparently also sign up with Stony Brook.) Then, LIU offered one-on-one faculty-student meetings in another attempt to soothe the worries of the writers. According to some of the students, these did quell some of their uncertainties about their futures and opened the door to the question, "Can we transfer to Stony Brook?" For the most part the answer to that is, "Yes," although there are still a few minor points that need to be ironed out, such as whether or not the Stony Brook University purchase of the Southampton campus from LIU will go through. As of now, it seems as if it will happen, but the process is very slow and drawn out. So if students would like to attend classes with Rosenblatt or Reeves this fall, there is a chance they will have to do it at Stony Brook's main campus.

In this week's episode of LIU Southampton, The College that Just Won't Die, the big question is: what is going to happen to the LIU writing program? The letter and the meetings all stated that the program was 'moving to Brooklyn. But there seems to be a slight oversight in this plan. The state has not approved them to transfer the program. All college programs have to be approved by the state before a school can institute the program into their

THE HAMPTON JETTIES AND THE BEACH

By Breck Archer

I have some bad news for everyone. Long Island is a sand bar. We live on a 22,000-year-old piece of glacial moraine. Our homes are built on a 120-mile long sediment mound left over from an ice block the size of a continent. Just like any sandbar, ours is transient and constantly evolving. This is a fact that must be understood before delving into the controversy that surrounds our beachfront maintenance and protection projects. If you read Dan's Papers, then you know this problem manifests itself in the form of three rock outcroppings lying perpendicular to the shore at Georgica

Beach in East Hampton. These jetties and groins are failed and incomplete Army Corps of Engineers projects and stir up questions and outcries that must be sorted out before a colossal tempest sends a storm surge through the living rooms of the East End's beachfront residents.

This uproar is nothing new, yet nothing is getting done to avoid an imminent disaster. I present to you a brief summary of the ongoing threat of beach erosion and a possible solution that may please everybody:

The ocean current on the south shore of Long Island moves from east to west. As the water flows, it carries sand westward down the beach. So Mother Nature is intending to gradually diminish the size of the East End. There's no sense in fighting it, but as humans, we continually attempt to alter the course of nature. Maybe I'm simplifying things. But there are ways to bring this eroding process down to speed. Unfortunately, the past methods applied to our East End beaches have proved to be failures. The groins at Georgica Beach are an existing example of erosion-protection failure. They were erected in 1958 by the Army Corps of Engineers (ACE), at the request of reviews: st. francis and linda bird

By Debbie Tuma

It was evident that Saint Francis of Assisi touched a lot of lives by the large turnout of about 100 people at the Rogers Memorial Library in Southampton last Wednesday. They had brought their bag lunches, as part of the library's ongoing series of noon events, to hear Sagaponack author Linda Bird Francke talk about her explorations through Italy, following in the footsteps of this popular saint on his life-long journey.

Francis

ventured through Italy for 20 years, "preaching peace and repentance in hill towns and valleys, and withdrawing to the solitude of mountaintop hermitages, an astonishing number of which exist to this day," as she writes in her introduction.

She also said after 9/11, she got "fed up" by the politics in this country, and didn't like the direction this country was going with this administration, and she longed to go somewhere beautiful and surround herself with an inspiring project.

"About 12 years ago, Harvey and I went to the small Umbrian town of Assisi, to see his work, and we walked in his gardens, saw his basilica with its gorgeous piazza, and we got hooked," she said. "We set out three years ago, armed with medieval guidebooks of his route from Assisi through Umbria and Tuscany, and we put 3,700 miles on our rented car to keep up with him."

Showing numerous slides of the Italian countryside, and the many inns she and her husband stayed in, Francke explained how they went on three separate trips to Italy over three years. They were there about six months in total doing research for the book.

Harvey and Linda

"In the process, we grew very fond of St. Francis, and we didn't want this book to end," she admitted.

Many artists painted portraits of St. Francis of Assisi. "Throughout the first half of his life, he was actually a party animal," said Francke. "His father was a rich cloth merchant who filled his cup with gold, and he went about having a life of pleasure," she said. "But he became more holy the second half of his life, repenting and praying alone in the mountains. He told people how to save their souls, and he practiced living in poverty — barely eating, and wearing only rags. He deprived himself of all earthly pleasures, putting ashes on his food to keep from eating, and throwing himself into rose bushes when he felt any sexual desires."

At one point, St. Francis was mugged and beaten by bandits, and he recovered in a monastery, on his way to sainthood. He walked around Italy for 20 years barefoot, preaching, helping people, and setting animals free.

"He thought every living person, animal, bird and insect was a gift from God, and he is the patron saint of ecology," said Francke. "He also worshipped the trees, grass, and the stars and moon."

Loomis and Francke climbed many hairpin turns going up the steep Italian mountains, and they visited inns, hermitages, monasteries and sanctuaries where St. Francis either curriculum. Because the faculty will alter from the current Southampton MFA program, the state has now requested a list of faculty, current library holdings and several other pieces of key information. So, while waiting for the MFA program to go through, the students at Southampton currently either are caught between a rock and hard place or they have three options.

The first option is to transfer to a different university. Obviously, Stony Brook seems like the most likely place as it offers familiar faces, and will hopefully return a full program to Southampton College. Maybe.

The second option is to switch to LIU Brooklyn's MA program in English with a concentration in Creative Writing. They can use this program as a safe harbor until the MFA

So maybe that's the answer. It's gotten worse and worse in the last five years, and all it is is global warming. Still another theory. Just another reason to sign program at Brooklyn is up and running (if it does get approved by the state).

And finally, Southampton MFA students can stay put. As Charles Hitchcock, Dean of Graduate Studies, says, Southampton has the "responsibility to teach-out the program." This would more than likely be done through tutorials and not through full classes, creating an interesting situation. Whether or not the tutorials will be held on campus is speculation, but if LIU is teaching out their program in Southampton, and Stony Brook purchases the college and begins their own MFA program, then there will be two MFA programs going on in Southampton. Initially this doesn't sound like such a bad deal, but for Stony Brook who, from all reports, has great plans for the Southampton campus, this would be like buy-the Kyoto Protocol.

And that two mile stretch on the Highway in Wainscott? Maybe the moths just see me coming. And they take note how I have gotten there. From Steven Hands, they stay put. From coming down the Highway, they fly off for a while. Some sort of moth practical joke.

"Here he comes again."

ing a house with the previous owners leaving their Aunt Helga in the upstairs bedroom.

As for the Southampton Writers' Conference, a staple of the Hamptons' summer for over a decade, Robert Reeves says that it will go on. It will probably not be the full program it has been in the past, as there are many things that would have to be taken care of in a very short period of time, but the event would happen in some form. At this date it is too early to say exactly what it will entail, but it will be packed with renowned writers just like in the past.

That's it for this week, thanks for joining us. Please tune in for the next installment, which is sure to wow and astonish you. Will the MFA program at Brooklyn go through? Who's staying? Who's going? Who will be voted off the Island?

Who's Here

By Debbie Tuma

After 40 years spent teaching and advocating for social change all over the world, Charles Hitchcock, of East Hampton, will now be starting a new chapter in his fascinating life. In September, he will be taking a sabbatical from his position as Dean of Southampton College to work with a non-governmental group called Peace Action, where he will be attending hearings and briefings at the United Nations and writing his perceptions. The following year, he plans to retire from the college, where he has been a professor of sociology since 1967.

From the time he was a young man, growing up in the upper class white neighborhood of Glendale, California, near Los Angeles, Hitchcock knew he was interested in two things — social change and world travel.

"Back in the 1950s, growing up in this conservative, fundamentalist and Protestant town of about 150,000 people, we still had laws prohibiting Afro-Americans from going out on the sidewalks after dusk," he said. "There were no blacks or Jews in the whole town. The real estate agents were the 'unofficial gatekeepers' of this place, and both my parents were realtors."

His mother was also a member of the conservative John Birch Society, and even as a young man, Hitchcock began searching for other role models with ideas more in keeping with his own. He was curious about other cultures, and began reading magazines like National Geographic.

"At a young age, I became addicted to National Geographic, and I knew I wanted to go overseas," said Hitchcock, over a cup of a special Kenya coffee at Starbucks in East Hampton.

During seventh grade, Hitchcock, who prefers to use his nickname, Chuck, affiliated himself with a Presbyterian church in a nearby town of Lacanada, where he learned new ideas.

"This more liberal church gave me a set of guidelines and moral values which were different from those of my parents," he said.

After high school, he decided to travel to the East Coast to attend Colgate University, to major in political science and minor in philosophy and religion. "Back in 1957, when I started college, the East Coast was the place to go if you wanted to get into the Foreign Service, and

Charles Hitchcock Activist

I wanted to study diplomatic relations," said Hitchcock.

At Colgate, he became influenced by a political science professor, John Markum, who specialized in African studies and was asked by the then- Junior Senator John F. Kennedy from Massachusetts, to brief him on Africa. At

He will be taking a sabbatical with a non-governmental group, Peace Action, attending hearings and briefings at the UN and writing his perceptions.

Markum's suggestion, Hitchcock went in 1960 with a group called "Operation Crossroads Africa," to Sierra Leone, in West Africa. This group, run by a Harlem Presbyterian minister named John Robinson, sent young American and Canadian students for a summer to work with young African students, in the capital city of Freetown.

"We stayed at the university, and we were part of a work camp to help build roads and excavate the land," explained Hitchcock. "But unfortunately, we were there during the rainy season, so it was really muddy." During the time he was there, African slaves from the Caribbean were also there. The following year, in 1961, Sierra Leone gained its independence. That year, Hitchcock also wrote his senior thesis on the possibility of economic unity in West Africa.

In June of 1961, Hitchcock turned his dream into reality, by taking the Peace Corps test, and in August, he joined, with a 10-week training period in Putney, Vermont, before being sent overseas to East Pakistan, with about 30 teammates. Hitchcock spent the next 18 months teaching American Diplomatic History in Bangladesh, where he also lived with a family, to learn "Bengali." He taught at Rajshahi University, where he was able to teach in English.

Hitchcock said the whole experience of working and living in Pakistan changed his life entirely. "I was an upper-class kid, who had no idea of the strengths I had, and I had never been pushed to test my limits," he said. When the university went on strike, during an upheaval in Pakistan politics, he also taught third grade social studies for several more months at a local boy's school.

Finishing his two-year commitment in the Peace Corps, Hitchcock came back to the U.S. to study the process of social change, called, "Rural Sociology," at Penn State. He eventually transferred to New York University, to earn his Masters Degree in Human Relations/Community Studies. The head of his department had gotten a grant to help the Board of Education integrate the area schools, so Hitchcock worked on a project to integrate the schools in Bedford Stuyvesant, Bushwick, and Richmond, Queens. He also worked in Hell's Kitchen, to help with issues of prejudice in the Latino community there.

When he finished his Master's degree, Hitchcock was working at the YMCA of Greater New York, when he came down with amoebic dysentery, combined with amoebic hepatitis, from his former travels in East Pakistan.

"I must have gotten this from the amoebas in the water there, which were impossible to avoid, and I was sick for about 13 months," Hitchcock recalled. "I lost a total of 53 pounds in two years, and I had no energy. This condition recurred about every 18 months, and finally, I was hospitalized in 1969." He finally tried an experimental drug from Mexico, and it wiped out the amoebas in his system for good.

Hitchcock said, "I still remember, that during that time, it was hard to work, but I continued to pursue my academic career." In 1967, he got a position at Southampton College, teaching sociology, and also being a "community specialist," to help identify social problems in the community.

He was hired by Dr. Don Baker, Professor of Political Science at Long Island University,

CW Post campus, who is still there. "He wanted someone from the Peace Corps, because he believed in experiential learning," said Hitchcock. "I had applied to 11 colleges for jobs, but I chose Southampton College because of their interest and belief in experiential learning — both in and outside the classroom." As part of his work as a community specialist, he would go into the towns with questionnaires about different races living in this area.

After living in Southampton Town for a year, Hitchcock said he chose to move to East Hampton Town, because, "I felt that during the 1960s, Southampton was too stratified a community, and I liked the more diversified, open community of East Hampton."

During his years at Southampton College, Hitchcock also worked with Head Start Programs all over Long Island, helping working students to study for their college degree on weekends or in their spare time. He also chaired the Division of Social Sciences and the Faculty Council. In 2002, he was named Dean of Southampton College, after Tim Bishop left to go into Congress.

Hitchcock said he enjoyed seeing the college grow and change over the many years he was there, "especially in the areas of marine science and art." He said although he will miss working at the college when he retires, he is looking forward to working with the United Nations this fall, surrounded by the many cultures he finds so fascinating, and he hopes to continue to make a difference in the international scene, while his returns to his home in East Hampton on the weekends.

St. Francis (continued from page 22)

stayed or was recognized. They photographed many altars, shrines and statues dedicated to his memory throughout Italy.

"I loved the hermitages, with gorgeous gardens, which are now Franciscan retreats," said Francke. "It was easier to feel St. Francis in the country hermitages than in the noisy cities with cell phones ringing."

She also explained the hardships he endured while striving for sainthood. "We saw places where he fasted in caves, and where he wrestled with his playboy past. He stood on rocks for days on end, begging God to forgive him. He also performed many miracles in his travels, such as causing water to flow from a rock for a thirsty man, and turning water into wine."

But from all his starvation and deprivation, St. Francis's health waned in later life, and so did his vision. He returned to Assisi in 1220, and was so mobbed by adoring fans, that he had to preach from a boat. By the age of 45, his health had declined from neglect, and he died surrounded by his closest friars. His body was hidden deep in a rock, where it remained for 600 years.

"Francis's legacy lives on at his hermitage, where candy, candles, money and flowers are all spread around in memory of him," said Francke. "His biography, which we also read, is very touching. He was canonized two years after his death."

"On the Road With Francis of Assisi" is available at Canio's Books in Sag Harbor, as well as other local bookstores. When asked what she plans to do next, Francke said she would like to do another travelogue book called, "On the Road With Joan of Arc," another one of her heroines.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By DAVID LION RATTINER

When Technology Fails

Sometimes living in today's digital world can backfire on you. The other day I was with my friend Steve Picken on the New York City subway. Steve, a Staten Island Ferry Captain, is into boats and the two of us were headed down to some marina that he knew of in Battery Park City where we were going to race remote control sailboats.

I was feeling really touristy, as I normally do in New York City, and had my pocket-sized digital camera on me.

I thought that it would be great to get a picture of Steve and me on the subway and asked a lady who was wearing these tall, brown boots with fur on the outside of them to take our picture, which she immediately agreed to do.

In the good old days, getting your picture taken was a photographic gamble. You'd give a person your camera, get your photo taken and that was it. But now, when somebody takes your picture with a digital camera, you can immediately see the result, which either causes utter disappointment or complete happiness, depending on how you think that you look in the photo.

Steve and I both put on our best smiles for the furry boot lady. The woman expertly took the picture, then handed me back the camera. Immediately, I hit the button on the camera that turns it from picture taking mode to picture viewing mode. When I did this, I immediately looked at myself in the picture.

I don't mean to sound modest, but I looked really cool in this picture. I mean this was one of the best pictures that anyone had ever taken of me. I was totally psyched about it. Then I felt my friend Steve look over my shoulder, which then drew my attention to Steve's face in the photo. His expression in the photo was not really a smile, it was more of a mouth hanging open. His eyes were half closed as well, which made him look like he just took a bite out of a lemon and was reacting to it. "Oh, man, delete that one."

I couldn't blame him for saying this, but how could I just delete this picture of myself? Maybe I'll tell him that I'll crop him out, which I probably won't do, considering it would look suspicious to have a picture of just myself on the subway with some strange male arm on my shoulder and no face to identify the arm to. I'll tell a small white lie. "No man, I'm going to put this up on my myspace profile. This is like one of the best pictures of me. Look, I'll crop it so you aren't in the photo."

Steve examined it again, this time looking at my picture. I could see him thinking about whether or not he was going to admit that this was a good picture of me. When you are a Staten Island Ferry Captain or, really, just a straight guy in general, it is tricky business to give your opinion on how another guy looks. On the inside, you might agree that a guy looks good or bad, but on the outside, you don't want anyone to know your opinion. In fact, you don't want to admit to anyone that you even think about things like that. A pretty normal strategy so that you can avoid any judgment by another human being on your having the ability to distinguish a guy that looks good from a guy that looks bad, is to pretend that you have the inability to tell the difference.

But here, I had Steve caught. He had already admitted that he didn't look good in the photo, so obviously he was going to be able to distinguish that I looked good and then allow me to keep the photo. After all, it is my camera in the first place. "I don't know, I can't really tell how you look, man. I'm not a woman! But look at me, dude, my eyes are closed and my mouth is open. That's not the way you are supposed to look in a photo. You won't crop me out, then you'll see my arm and it will look strange. Just delete it, it's not a big deal."

Touché.

Now the ball was in my court. Steve was not going to let this photograph of himself grace the Internet world of myspace and he was going to also refuse to admit that I looked good in the photo. Then he dropped his final, finishing blow, "How can you tell that you look good in the photo anyway, man? You need a girl to judge that for you. Just delete it, we'll take another later."

I was caught. Steve was using Jedi mind games to get this photo of him off my camera. I was not about to explain to him the reasons why I felt I looked good in the photo; after all, I'm a guy. This was all part of his strategy to get the photo off the camera and I had to admit, I was impressed. "You should be a lawyer," I said. Then I reluctantly deleted the photo

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Shelter Islander #388

Dachshunds

My mother, who has three cats, decided she didn't have enough to do, so she adopted two young Dachshunds. They bark at everyone and anything that moves. They scare easily and pee when ever they get scared, which is often. I know that many people are dedicated to this breed, but I don't know why. They just pee and bark. They're cute, but so is a daffodil...

My mother says they're angels when no one is around and it's just the three of them. But this is the same woman who told me that fairies would pay money for my teeth, so her credibility is questionable.

But in fairness, there's nothing wrong with these two noisy little pee bags that couldn't be fixed by a taxidermist. I think they'd make wonderful bookends.

Here's my list of uses for a dachshund, stuffed or live, I don't really care:

Neck roll: If you have them stuffed with a nice latex foam, they'd make a great neck roll for lying on the couch.

Doorstop: How cute would this be? A dachshund, with that goofy little smile, filled with about five pounds of buckshot would hold open just about any sized door.

Coat collar: I know the fox collars of the 40s and 50s are out of style, but that's because foxes live in the wild and are hard to catch. Dachshunds live in people's houses and are relatively easy to catch with just a few doggie treats and a net. Dachshund collars could make an adorable fashion statement and I bet little kids would love to pet the doggie wrapped around Mommy's neck.

Tire Stop. Both ferries use chock blocks to push under your tires to limit movement on the ferry. A sand filled dachshund would make a perfect tire stop. Plus it's long enough that you could have "Welcome to Shelter Island" shaved into its fur.

Fair Event: They have Caber Tosses at some fairs, why not a Hound Hurl? Big men could swing dachshunds overhead by their tails and hurl them in a distance contest. For an extra challenge, live dachshunds could be used because they'd run as soon as they hit the ground and add the dimension of chase to the contest!

Fireman's Wiener Dog Roast: The Shelter Island Firemen have an annual barbecue, how great to add a wiener dog roast? I estimate the average roasted dachshund could feed a family of six. And why not? This is the Year of the Dog and dog is a favorite meal in Communist China. We're importing everything else Chinese, why not a few cultural recipes?

Water Toys: An air-filled dachshund, with sand in its feet for ballast will float in a standing position and look just adorable in your pool. Cup holders can be strapped to the back for drinks.

Moorings: I can't really recommend dachshunds for mooring. They're too squishy and wouldn't even last half a season.

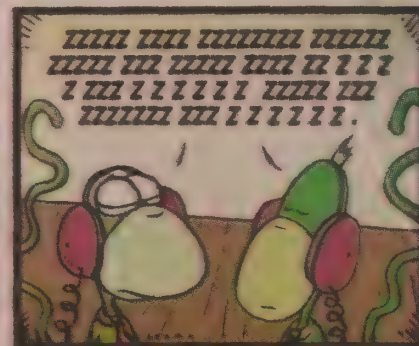

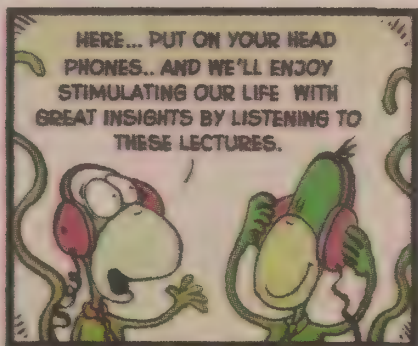

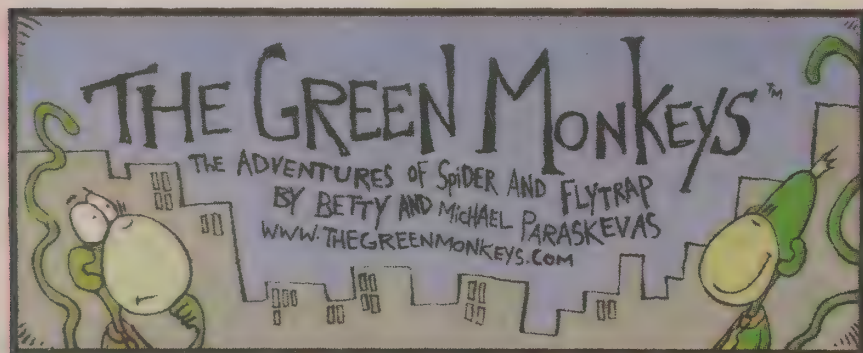

Lawn Decor: Here's something dachshunds were born for! Imagine purchasing several stuffed doxies from the garden shop and placing them all around your lawn. You can position them chasing a ball, jumping in the air, put one in a tree looking down and forlorn. You could change their positions every week and give the neighbors a treat every time they drive by.

Slippers: I had a pair of slippers once that were stuffed parrots. Why not dachshund slippers? Cute, warm... and silent! You can put them on the bed if you feel like you need four beady eyes staring at you in the morning. If you miss the sound of them, just go to annoyingdogbarks.com and download their sharp, nerve grating barks. If you play them at a slower speed, they sound like St. Bernards, speed it up and they sound like Chihuahua's.

Races: Dachshund races would be fun to watch. They look stupid when they run and they're so easily distracted, they'd never stay in their lanes... the races would quickly disintegrate into a dachshund donnybrook funny enough to rival Animal Planet's Puppy Bowl.

Speed Bumps: Everyone struggles to slow down people on their streets or even in their driveways. What better way than to install cement filled dachshunds? Everybody will brake, thinking they are about to hit some sweetie pie wiener dog. Only it will turn out to be the wiener dog from hell as it takes out their oil pan!

But... all kidding aside... I really do find these dogs annoying.

then PanAm CEO and gazillionaire Juan Trippe, who was intent on protecting his oceanfront mansion from the cruel, battering waves of the Atlantic. This government project, much like the half-assed effort of the Westhampton jetties, built in the 1970s became known as a project for a project's sake. It employed people and gave the Army Corps of Engineers something to do. It was just like FDR's New Deal program, the Works Progress Administration (WPA); the jetty construction gave people work even though the outcome still causes problems today. It doesn't take a scientist or a survey to prove that these stone structures halt the natural flow of sand, thus building up the beach on the east side of the jetty, and depriving the west side from sand replenishment.

The importation and transportation of sand from beaches east of the devilish boulders to beaches west of them is an example of what is currently working for beach replenishment. Beaches that were once typically erosion-prone in Westhampton and Hampton Bays have barely been bruised due to the importation of over a million tons of sand by the Army Corps of Engineers approximately a year ago. But this process is not cheap. At $2.50 a cubic yard, sand is more coveted than gold and oil for beachfront residents. The stock value of sand is still rising. I'm thinking about purchasing a couple thousand shares from the town and sitting pretty while riding out the storm season.

After the huge rains came last summer, flooding the area and causing residents to contemplate collecting animals and building an arc, Old Testament style, Southampton Town Supervisor Patrick Heaney declared a state of emergency. It was reported that 80,000 cubic yards of sand were lost in some areas while the beach width receded about 60 feet. The groins at Georgica weren't the sole culprit for the devastating erosion in Sagaponack and Wainscott, but they certainly were a major factor. Should they be removed? I'm not sure. They are self-serving structures for the houses situated directly behind them, while they starve the beaches to the west of sand.

Before the members of the Surfrider Organization come looking for me, thinking I'm some rich suit calling for a dismantling of a prime surf spot, I just want to make it clear that the Georgica groins create one hell of a point break; a peeling right wave that is a rare entity on Long Island. I recently headed down to Georgica Beach with my 7'10" mini-Maui (my 6'4" shortboard is being repaired) to do some journalistic investigation and discovered that with the right swell and wind direction, this place can definitely go off. By removing the Georgica groins, homeowners would be happy while surfers would hang their heads, defeated, as another surf spot fades thanks to a man-made effort. That's why I'm in full support of any alternatives that can save the jetties, while sparing the coast from destruction. I don't think I'm in a minority on this issue. One such project that is being recognized as a beach stabilizer is the erection of massive artificial reefs that would run parallel to the shoreline a few hundred yards off shore. These submerged structures made from environmentally friendly materials such as steel or concrete could prove to be the saviors of Long Island's south shore beaches. The artificial reefs act as a natural breakwater, like a sandbar, and cause large and powerful waves to break far away from shore, hence losing their power before eroding beaches and destroying homes. Positive effects have already been proven at the Iberostar Resort on the south shore of the Dominican Republic, where an artificial reef was installed in 1998. Since the reef's construction, the beach has gained 10-13 meters in width within the first three years. The beaches adjacent to these reefs have also remained stable. Obviously, no two beaches are the same, so a project like this would need extensive research before feasibly being considered to effectively save the ocean shores of Long Island.

These reefs also can be great for recreational activities such as fishing, diving, snorkeling, and surfing. The artificial reef will act as a shore barrier, a home for marine life, and a stalwart break for surfers. Everybody could be smiling. But we have to be realistic. The cost of an artificial reef project would be undoubtedly expensive, yet could yield such a major benefit. It could provide labor, utilize taxes with meaning, and solve a problem that has been plaguing our island since its prehistoric glacial birth. With the threat of village secession and beach recession, it is understood that immediate action needs to be taken. But the longevity of our island is a concern as well. Hopefully, the artificial reef is the answer that will help break the wave of strife afflicting the East End.

keeps losing and now the amounts that might be owed are about a billion dollars, which, incidentally, RIM has.

But still RIM won't settle. They've appealed to the patent office to look more closely at the seven patents that NTP has. And indeed, so far the patent office has found flaws in four of the applications. Only three more to go.

But time is running out. NTP now has a decision saying that RIM must shut off all Blackberries. If that happens, everybody's Blackberry screen goes dark, including mine. And all this is to happen in weeks. So it's a race against time. Maybe the patent office will bail RIM out. Maybe not.

And, RIM won't settle. RIM says they have a software workaround. Nobody's screen is going dark. Trouble is that the workaround will take 30 million man hours to get everybody back to where they were. And so it goes.

The real question, then, is whether Anna Nicole Smith, after the Supremes decide, will use a Blackberry to tell Jesus how her case with the deceased husband came out.

Few things compare to the American Legal System.

East End's Only Co-Op Tasting Room Closes. Why?

By Lenn Thompson

Last fall, Leucadia National Corporation, owner of Pine Ridge Winery in Napa, California and Archery Summit in Dundee, Oregon, purchased Charles John Vineyard, Broadfields Wine Cellars, its vineyard and both locations of The Tasting Room, home to not only Broadfields wines, but also those from Schneider Vineyards and Comtesse Therese.

Representatives from Leucadia National have largely declined to comment on the deal, but they did announce last weekend that they planned to close both Tasting Room stores at the close of business on Thursday, March 2. No official reason was offered in an e-mail sent to members of the wine club and mailing list, but one potential reason is that that more re-planting of vines is necessary than originally expected, meaning that Broadfields likely won't have much wine to sell for the next several years.

Calls to Schneider Vineyards weren't returned, but Lisa Cannac, sales manager for Comtesse Therese said that their wines will be available for tasting and purchase at Vineyard 48 after the Tasting Room closings.

Battling Dragons: Joining The Knights Of Columbus

By David Lion Rattiner

I have been considering joining the Knights of Columbus Marian Council out in Cutchogue. Last weekend I had read that they had a breakfast buffet and I immediately became interested, not only because I wanted a breakfast buffet, but because I have always wanted to be a knight. Who doesn't?

Joining the Knights of Columbus in Cutchogue may be a little dangerous, however. After all, I am going to have to battle dragons with just a sword and travel great distances throughout Cutchogue, Greenport and Southold on horseback.

I am also looking forward to attending a roundtable, where I can eat with my hands and discuss the politics of the North, the kingdoms and kings, and the lords and the nobles. I would make a good knight, obeying orders by the king of the council, but also questioning his motives and being a leader at the same time.

The armor is going to be heavy and enemies might be lurking just about everywhere that I am, I may even have to rescue a Princess. On the other hand, adventure is in my blood and knights get a lot of respect from children and adults alike. There is also the honor of being a knight and a hero for that matter. After all, who will protect the North Fork from dragons and invaders? I decided that I was ready for battle, and gave the Knights of Columbus in Cutchogue a call.

"Yes Hello, this David, I am just a peasant, but I wish to be a knight. May I join thee? Who do I have to sword fight?"

"Um. Well, the Knights of Columbus is a fraternal organization. We support charities and do positive things for the community. We support the Catholic Church and are community based. We give money to the needy and offer assistance to the sick and disabled and also to their families. We have members all over the world and do our best to support our community. We don't really do any sword fighting."

"No sword fighting? Can I carry a sword, my lord?"

"I guess if you want to. But I'd recommend carrying a plastic one."

"I can handle that even better than a real one, my lord!"

"Well if you want to join us, just let us know."

The Knights of Columbus Marion Council in Cutchogue can always use new members and is a great thing to do for the community. They do good work, battling not dragons, but poverty, illness and other evils. Their number is 631-734-7338.

The Doc Is In For Seals and Sea Turtles

"Oceans Of Hope" Benefit To Help Protect Our Friendly Friends In The Sea

By R.B. Stuart

There is some important environmental work being done right here in Riverhead by The Riverhead Foundation for Marine Research and Preservation, a not for profit that operates the New York State Marine Mammal and Sea Turtle Rescue Program. This unique facility, located in the same premises as Atlantis Marine World, has been rescuing marine seals, sea turtles, whales, dolphins, and porpoises for nine years. In 2005 their seal rescue, rehabilitation and release totaled to 146, their sea turtles between 30 and 40. So far this year, they have rehabilitated 19 seals rescued from Long Island waters. The cost is staggering to rescue and rehabilitate these wild animals for a five to eight week period. One seal is $6,500, which includes medicine, food, staff and vet care. Currently they have 14 seals, which will cost The Foundation a whopping $91,000. The sea turtles, on the other hand, are kept for six to eight months, since they need to be released when water temperatures are at least 50 degrees in order to make the migration down south for the winter. Lower than that they lose their basic life functions impairing their travel.

Caring for one sea turtle will cost $4,500 and seven will be $31,500. The foundation does not get fish donations, so they provide the herring needed to feed these "recuperating and sickly guests from the sea." Each seal can eat up to 10 - 12 pounds of herring per day. To care for both the seals and sea turtles The Foundation will need $122,500, about the cost of a pretty sweet Ferrari. That's why their sixth annual Oceans of Hope Benefit on Saturday, March 4th is crucial in helping to raise their projected goal of $150,000.

The Riverhead Foundation was founded in 1997 by Robert DiGiovanni Jr., senior biologist director, and Kim Durham, the rescue program director. "We're responsible for New York State, but at times when the New England Aquarium needs help we assist," Durham said. In fact The Foundation was the first US facility to rescue and successfully rehabilitate a Risso's

Dolphin named "Rocky." In 2004 they were called by Delaware officials regarding a Dolphin that had washed ashore. Because The Riverhead Foundation was the only marine facility that had an available tank big enough, he was transported there.

"We rehabilitated him for eight months in our outdoor tank. At the time of release his medical bills totaled $400,000. We released him in the waters off Shinnecock and were able to track him with a device for 67 days until it fell off. He stayed around the area for a few days then headed back down to Delaware where he came from," Durham explained.

The Foundation hopes at some point to build a heating tent over the outdoor tank so if they should rescue another dolphin, at least in the winter months, they'll have the capabilities to keep our friends of the sea warm.

Not only is The Foundation a facility with over 15 tanks, but it also has a lab and surgical room. Recently an X-ray machine was obtained, allowing them the ability to take lung X-rays of the seals with respiratory infections, or to see if they have swallowed any rocks or sand. Seals eat rocks and sand when they are unable to find food.

Long Island seals have a habitat of sandy beaches, rocks, floating ice and docks. They choose locations where they can go from sea to land easily. They rest on a dock, for example, and sunbathe then exit back to the sea. Seals can stay under water for 2 - 5 minutes and have a life expectancy in captivity for 25 years. The wild is significantly less. They are up to five feet long and 250 pounds and feed on squid, herring, bunker and bait fish. At maturity, around the ages of five to seven, they give birth once a year up to 15 years old. Healthy seals have a 2 - 3 centimeter layer of blubber that protects them from the cold waters of December thru March. It's when they're sick or run down that the blubber reabsorbs, resulting in influenza or infections. Other problems that bring them to shore are bite wounds from other seals or sharks, seal pox (like Chicken pox) and tangled netting. The occasional shark is their predator along with diseases and man made threats.

There usually aren't any heroics when rescuing seals. The challenge is getting people to leave the seals alone once they're spotted on the beach. "Until we arrive on the scene it's up to the authorities to protect the people from the seal and the seal from the people who are usually trying to push it back into the water or cover it with blankets because it's shivering and yawning. Unknowingly to them, those are aggressive signs seals make to tell people to stay away. All you're doing is stressing the animal out and putting yourself at risk for a bite or illness, even just by patting them. They may look helpless, but it is important to let experts handle them," Durham informed.

If you'd like to support the cause, tour the facility, attend a lecture, or from January to April go on a seal cruise around Long Beach, The Riverhead Foundation is happy to accommodate. If you'd like to partake in their Oceans of Hope Benefit, on Saturday 7 p.m. to 12 a.m., reservations are needed for this dinner, cocktails, silent auction and dancing extravaganza, undoubtedly a worthy cause. They are located in Riverhead on 467 East Main Street. For more information, to purchase tickets, make a donation or become a sponsor call 631-369-9840 or visit www.riverheadfoundation.org

North Fork Artist of The Week

Photographer, Gary Bartoloni

By R.B. Stuart

When Gary Bartoloni was nine years old, his father gave him a Kodak Tourism folding camera to take black and white photographs. "I took pictures of my family and was intrigued that I could capture moments of time and the light hitting the sensitized layer. But I liked biology and used to watch Jacques Cousteau and Flipper, and, when I got older, I thought I'd be a biologist," Bartoloni remembered.

Bartoloni, born 51 years ago in Brooklyn is an only child. He attended The City College of New York for biology and transferred to St. Josephs College in Brooklyn. "The entire four year term I went to LIU, I took basic photography classes. I then attended Pratt for photojournalism and fine art. I always leaned more towards photography, but never thought I could do it full time," he admitted.

At 21, while working at the aquarium on a research project, photography did just that. He received a call from his guidance counselor who asked him if he wanted to be a part-time photographer's assistant for a renowned fashion photographer, Mike Reinhardt. Not knowing what that entailed, he worked on his first fashion shoot amidst beautiful girls, making more money than he ever thought possible. From there he opened his own studio in New York City and continued working in the fashion industry. Before he knew it, he was shooting ads for Seventeen and Vogue. He also started doing commercial work, and shot for designers at 7th Avenue design houses. "In the 1980s I used to bring the models out to the North Fork and liked it. So I began shooting landscapes and eventually moved here. I stayed here for 17 years, then left and then returned to Greenport last year," he said.

What he loves about photography the most is "the freedom of expression. When I'm in the woods, I shoot the inner forest scenes. It's a transcendental experience. At a certain point while you're shooting, you disappear as a person. Suddenly the separation of your surroundings disappear and you become part of the surroundings, at one with it and in the moment. I do my best to capture the essence of spirit into an image for others to see. I believe I don't take the pictures, but that they're given to me by a divine power," Bartoloni says.

"Being a photographer is a big challenge. To me the art of it has to come from classic photography, but classical photography is dying now and digital photography is being recognized, which to me really isn't photography. The word photography in Greek means

'painting with light,' and digital is not that. Digital has removed the human element and I don't think it will attain the status of an art form," he explained.

Bartoloni derives his inspiration from the capturing of images. "I don't shoot to sell, I never did. What the general public likes or will not like never comes into the equation. My thrill is finding the image and being there," he stated.

"My work isn't influenced by others. I intentionally don't look at anybody else's work so that I'm not influenced," he said.

His dreams as an artist are now fulfilled. "My time is my own, I'm not influenced by the market, gallery owners or the public. The unspoken mission of an artist is to move the human race's perception ahead half a step. They don't come willingly, you have to drag them a little bit. They may not want to feel or recognize their emotions, never mind buy and bring it home," he added.

If there was one thing he could undo it would be the hand injury that occurred two years ago when he was on location with an old army truck he converted to a photography studio. His left hand was crushed in a winch, resulting in permanent bone/nerve damage. "It was a blessing, for it forced me to go back into the forest on foot. Being on foot gives you more of an intimate contact with your surroundings than shooting from the back of a truck, which distances you from your subject," he concluded.

You can view over 300 images on his website at www.thelightregistry.com or see his work at The Light Registry Gallery in Greenport on 429 Main Street. Bartoloni is available for selective commercial work and can be reached at 631-477-2153.

OVER THE BARREL...

with Lenn Thompson

At Jamesport Vineyards the Rot is Noble and Les is More

Over a year ago, Les Howard joined Jamesport Vineyards in Jamesport as head winemaker. The veteran of 12 Long Island vintages did so after stints at wineries including Wolffer Estate and Bedell Cellars. He told me upon his hiring that his goal is always to make "Bordeaux-style wines" with balance at the heart of his winemaking style, adding that, "spikes of oak or acidity numb your taste buds, shortening the finish."

He's right, of course, and it's something that our friends on the West Coast should remember.

Last weekend, I tasted three recent Jamesport Vineyard releases to see how things are shaping up with Les at the helm. The results are convincing.

Last spring, winery owner and well-regarded vineyard manager Ron Goerler told me that his Chardonnay grapes did "exceptionally well" and that quality is evident in both the 2004 East End Series Chardonnay ($13) and the 2004 Cox Lane Chardonnay ($19).

The East End Series Chardonnay is a crisp, decidedly refreshing white. Its nose presents ripe peach with wisps of vanilla, but also hints at richer, more tropical fruits like mango and pineapple. Comparable flavors follow through onto the palate and are framed by a palate-cleansing zing of acidity accented by a minerally finish. This isn't an overly complex wine, but it serves its purpose. Not only does the wine lend itself to our local fish and shellfish, but ten-percent of the proceeds from its sale goes to the

Southold Project in Aquaculture Training (SPAT), an organization that, among other things, strives to teach locals how to farm their own shellfish. "Perhaps one day the shellfish in our local waters will come back to the numbers they were at 30 years ago," commented Les.

Richer and more oak-inflected is the Cox Lane Chardonnay, which offers lemony, toasted marshmallow aromas. The Jamesport Vineyards website describes this wine as "more like California," but I found it much more Chablis or Macon than Napa. When chilled, it offers lean citrus and crisp pear flavors that develop into richer baked apple and caramel as the wine warms. With medium body and expertly balanced combinations of fruit character, oak accent and acidity, Les' talents are on display here. He strives for balance. Mission accomplished.

The last wine in the tasting, a 2004 Late Harvest Riesling ($30) is another standout. The Riesling grapes that went into this wine were afflicted by Botrytis cinerea, a mold known in wine circles as "noble rot." Botrytis dehydrates the grapes so they shrivel, concentrating and intensifying both sugar and flavor without reducing acid levels. As soon as you pour this wine, its special nature is evident. The amber-gold nectar coats your glass as you swirl it, releasing an intense, profound nose that is layered with dried apricots, hay, honey, caramel, baked apples and burnt sugar. Mouth filling in both body and flavor, additional notes of brown sugar, roasted figs and sweet raisins round out this supremely sweet wine that has just enough acidity to inspire that word again – balance.

For more information or to order these wines, visit www.jamesport-vineyards.com or call 722-5256.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

VINTAGE AMERICAN ART AT SPANIERMAN GALLERY

When March rolls around on the East End, we're ready for a pick-me-up. The current show at East Hampton's Spanierman Gallery fits the bill in many respects, providing for this critic a positive change of pace from abstraction.

While the styles often tend toward realism, most works evoke a mood and ambience which is romantic and nostalgic, welcomed qualities during these days of catastrophes and anxiety. Consider, for example, Charles Fussell's "Summer Afternoon" (circa 1880s). Here's the perfect idyllic day: a mother resting on a hammock while her son frolics nearby.

Then there's Jennie Brownscombe's "Leisurely Summer Day" (circa 1880s) featuring a young damsel with a flower bouquet; we can't help but be reminded of a Jane Austen novel. Going farther afield in time and place, there's "The Olympieum" (1912) by Anna Brewster, a subtle but still powerful structure that becomes less realistic as the image disappears into the mist.

Panoramic scenes give way to closer views: a still life by Frederick Heimerdinger, "A Hanging Bird on the Lid of a Cigar Box," (1880). The juxtaposition of objects (the white bird and cigar box) lends a slight disorienting and surreal quality to the piece, especially since the box is hanging upside down.

Another close-up view by Etsuo Shimizu called "Siesta" (1990s) features fruit and fish and also seems a bit surreal when conveying the rather unusual, sinuous local fish. The other odd aspect is that we can't exactly call this work a "vintage" piece because it was painted only 15 years ago.

Other endeavors go beyond the "vintage" category as well; they also go beyond realism, particularly Gershon Benjamin's "City Scope" (1975). Its New York City rooftops are given an orange hue at sunset, perhaps, the buildings' shapes closer to Constructivism. An earlier painting, Walter Lawrence's "Ghost Town" (circa 1950s), is similar in its geometric, box-like execution, but the abandoned group of buildings ironically seems alive, nonetheless.

There are other examples of works that move away from realism altogether and are, in fact, abstract: Gorky's 1936 graphite drawing, John Graham's 1930s "Abstract," and Alexander Corazzo's 1940s "Abstract."

However, this critic's very favorite is John Garth's "Jonquil Lady" (circa 1910-1920). It recalls Abstract Expressionism even at that point in time, signifying how far the iconic white-gowned woman has developed since Brownscombe's "Leisurely Summer Day" was painted just a mere 30 years before.

"Vintage American Art" will be on view at Spanierman Gallery until May 26.

HONORING THE ARTIST: FRED BENDER

Fred Bender, this week's cover artist, is an authentic lover of the land. And of the water, for that matter: Mr. Bender is a native of the North Shore, having worked on his Uncle Frank's Jamesport farm at an early age. It's no surprise then that he developed a deep and abiding respect for the land and the surrounding water.

Unlike similar places, which are no longer around, Mr. Bender's family farm still exists. But it's currently a horse farm, the old pond now a pasture, the potato fields now grass. Mr. Bender continues to pass the open fields every so often, relishing the memories that the site evokes. "The new owner asked me to paint a picture of it not too long ago," he says. "But I painted grapevines, not the horse barns. I guess it wasn't what the owner had in mind."

Mr. Bender's penchant for scenes of the past extends to other aspects of the North Shore's history. For example, he paints old boats, particularly shrimp sloops. He regales us with the way things used to be on the North Shore: the old mills situated where Riverhead's downtown parking lot now stands; the fancy Peconic Bay House Hotel, circa the 1880s, which overlooks a split of land in Jamesport. And finally, there's the Riverhead Harbor where McDonald's now stands, thriving until the 1930s when the train and trucks started to move cargo instead.

Lest we think that Mr. Bender was necessarily old enough to experience these things directly, we might add that he's learned about the past through turn-of-the-century postcards his parents gave him. He also uses other valued sources, like photographs from private collectors and historical societies, including the one at Port Jefferson.

While admiring marine painters like John Stobart and landscape artist Andrew Wyeth, Mr. Bender describes his work in very distinct ways. "I don't consciously tell a story," he explains. "But it's there. Often I'll have a painting within a painting. An image like the boat 'Modesty,' which was the last ship to be made in this area.

It's apparent that Mr. Bender is extremely proud of his homeland, recalling the times people from states like Utah and Colorado would visit this locale, saying it was the most beautiful place they had seen. Mr. Bender's attachment to the land here was reinforced when he visited Russia and the Baltics.

Mr. Bender continued, "My grandparents came from Eastern Europe, moving to Eastern Long Island as tenant farmers. I can see why they loved it here. Traveling through the Baltics reminded me of the farm fields on the South Shore.

"I'll never forget it."

—Marion Wolberg Weiss

Entertainment In Town

review: pajama game

By Dan Rattiner

The revival of the Broadway show Pajama Game premiered at the American Airlines Theatre on 42nd Street last Friday. It stars Harry Connick, Jr., Kelli O'Hara and Michael McKean in the lead roles. And this reviewer predicts it is going to light up the Great White Way for a very long time. It received a standing ovation at the premiere.

The Pajama Game, with book by George Abbott and music and lyrics by Adler and Ross, is one of the great musical comedy classics of the Broadway stage from the heyday of that genre, the 1950s. However, unlike all the others of that era (South Pacific, Oklahoma, Damn Yankees etc.), it has never been considered a candidate for revival. The reason is that it is dated. Set in 1954 Cedar Rapids, Ohio, it is about the machinations that go on inside an American clothing factory, specifically the Sleep Tite Pajama Factory, where, over and over, workers do the same thing on sewing machines while the bosses overlook the proceedings and, in this case, actually time how fast they make the pajamas.

This activity and these problems today are almost a non-issue. How do you update it for today? Set it in Mainland China?

The answer is that you don't update it. You present it as a period piece. And so the producers and directors of this new production have. The bosses chase the secretaries around the table. The workers, denied a seven and a half cent raise, engineer a slowdown and then some industrial sabotage. Meanwhile, the head of the union

(Kelli O'Hara) and the superintendent of the plant (Harry Connick, Jr.) fall recklessly in love, something that given all the sturm und drang is not supposed to be possible. (At one point, the superintendent FIRES this union leader.)

The reason for the revival, however, is that underneath all of this is a masterpiece. The songs were, at the time, one after another, #1 hits in the country. They include "Hey, There," "Steam Heat," "Hernando's Hideaway" and even "Seven and a Half Cents." And Southampton's Richard Adler, still going strong, has written two new songs for this production. As for the book – this may have been George Abbott's very best script. The characters are fully developed. The emotions are real. And if there were ever a production, on or off Broadway, that could transport us back to the manners of a half century ago in the heartland of America, this is it.

Even with all that, this production could rise or fall on a number of other factors. How, for example, does a worker chasing a co-worker who reports to him (or her) around a table in 1954 get translated to be understood in the context of today? (You simply show it.) How do you show the love-hate relationship of bosses and workers? Or, how do you translate a factory of all-white middle American workers into today's world? Why, that you change. The workers are black, Hispanic, white, whatever. There you go!

As it turns out, everything passes muster with flying colors. From the moment the curtain goes up to reveal the entire three story high stage framed in a halo of giant, six feet in diameter orange and pink pajama buttons, you know that chances are going to be taken, and there's going to be no holding back. The result is exciting, unique and innovative theatre at the highest level. And the fact that it overlays a masterpiece makes the evening a triumph.

Harry Connick, Jr. is a movie-star handsome, cocksure superintendent of the pajama factory whom all the female workers swoon over. He has a strong, baritone voice and an old fashioned way about him which perfectly fits the bill in this performance. (He also plays a mean impromptu Jazz piano in the scene at Hernando's Hideaway.)

Michael McKean gives a marvelous, hilarious performance as Hines, the time study man, who makes sure that everything gets done on time. (It doesn't.) He has some of the funniest lines. And he plays them to the hilt. He also suffers from overwhelming romantic jealousy. And he throws knives as a hobby.

His girlfriend, Gladys, is a standout, played by Megan Lawrence. And the boss of the factory, played in a three piece suit by Richard Poe, puts me in mind of George Steinbrenner.

The star of the show, however, is a relative newcomer to the theatre, Kelli O'Hara, who plays the Union leader and who, after trying to hold him off, caves in and falls in love with Harry Connick Jr. She is beautiful, poised, unerringly effective and smart. And she has a voice that has the clarity and beauty that put one in mind of Julie Andrews in The Sound of Music. Kelli has had a few smaller Broadway parts, but then won a Tony in her only starring role to date, in the show The Light in the Piazza. She could and should get a Tony for her performance in Pajama Game as well.

Complaints? I had not a one. Leaving the theatre humming some of the songs in the show, we heard others raving about it. "I could see this over and over again every night," one woman said. What an evening!

Entertainment In Town

review: red light winter...by gordin & christiano

The talented playwright Adam Rapp is at it again, stirring up his particular brand of magic with his latest drama, Red Light Winter, making its New York premier. It comes direct from a sold out run in Chicago where the same production opened this past May at Steppenwolf. Mr. Rapp is a wizard at depicting unflinchingly raw characters in disturbingly real situations. His particular magic comes with ample doses of smart poetic writing, juxtaposed with harshly honest dialogue that never fails to weave a hypnotic edgy spell.

All his plays, like last season's Finer Noble Gases and the previous season's Blackbird, have been immersed in gritty realism that although often shocking, lacked sound dramatic structure. With Red Light Winter the Pulitzer Prize-nominated playwright has constructed a very good play that is an intense character study boasting substantial emotional weight. Dramaturgically, this is a much improved Rapp. Still bleak, but also funny, the play is a distressing comment on friendship, love, sex, and our society's winners and losers. Dysfunctional families and misfits have always been a favorite of his, but now a refreshingly romantic Rapp has emerged from beneath his dreary surface.

The first act is set in a small bedroom of a youth hostel near the seedy Red Light District of Amsterdam, where the audience, upon entering the theatre, discovers a disheveled 30-year-old writer named Matt (Christopher Denham) transfixed by a blank computer screen. A nearby window allows filtered red light to fill the room. As the play begins Matt sits in a daze for several minutes before he suddenly turns off the computer, removes his belt, ties it around his neck, and attempts to hang himself from a hook behind the front door. When the hook is unable to sustain his weight, he crashes to the floor just moments before his traveling buddy, Davis (Gary Wilmes), a friend since freshman year at Brown, and now an up-and-coming fiction editor, arrives, promising a present.

When we learn his gift is a beautiful French prostitute named Christina (Lisa Joyce), in whose services Davis has already indulged (though he denies this to Matt), the evening's unrequited love/hate triangle is set in motion. Matt has been depressed and is in a self imposed state of celibacy, since his former girlfriend left him for his self serving best friend, the same arrogant Davis, who is turning out to be an annoyingly insensitive jerk.

The three share a few joints and some articulate, caustic banter that establishes Matt as a gifted writer whose promise has never been fulfilled, before Christina departs for a bathroom down the hall. On her return she is wearing a long red satin gown and hopes to impress Davis by singing a provocative song she has written, but instead mesmerizes Matt. When Davis departs, encouraging the two to get it on, they soon undress for what turns out to be a quickie, as Matt climaxes in less than a minute. Christina sneaks away while he is sleeping, but leaves her red gown and a tape of Tom Waits singing "Tom Traubert's Blues."

The action of Act Two takes place on a frigid winter evening about a year later in Matt's cramped, run down East Village apartment. Matt remains suicidal as he struggles with his writing, but now he is obsessed with memories of Christina and listens to the Tom Waits tape she left behind. When Christina arrives unexpectedly, thinking she has come to Davis' apartment, the evening's upsetting events unfold to a disturbing conclusion.

Red Light Winter has been directed by the playwright and he has, unfortunately, stacked the deck against himself, allowing the play to become somewhat tedious. He has three extremely gifted actors who have turned in extraordinarily realistic work, but he has not guided them to play the dichotomies inherent in these characters, instead keeping them one dimensional. There is nothing really surprising about their behavior. They appear exactly as written, when occasionally going against the grain of the text would be much more interesting. As it is you tire of them rather quickly, though not the compelling story.

Playwrights directing their own work often miss a director's vision of the larger picture. As engrossing and real as Red Light Winter may be, there is an even more exciting revival waiting to happen.

Red Light Winter opened the Barrow Street Theater 27 Barrow Street @ 7th Avenue South, on February 9, 2006. For tickets call 212-279-4200.

Dave Evans' MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

Dave Chappelle's Block Party

An unusual combination of comedian Dave Chappelle and director Michel Gondry (at his most accessible with Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind), the film is a kind of musical-stand-up-documentary. Chappelle pulls together an impressive line-up of stars to accompany him, including a reunited Fugees, but it is his charisma that truly drives the film. Comic genius.

16 Blocks

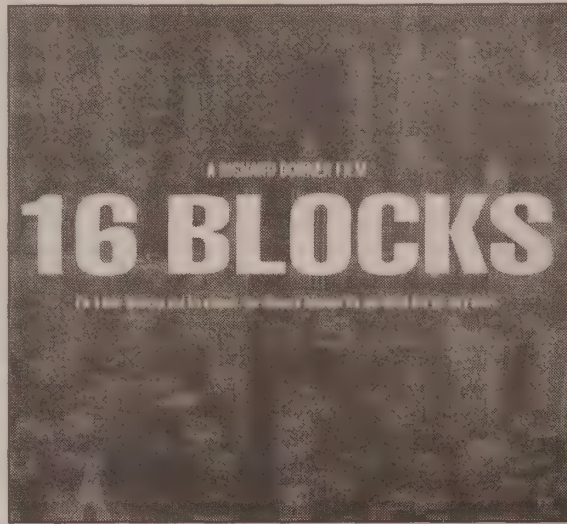

Richard Donner, director of the esteemed Lethal Weapon tetralogy, takes the helm for this better-than-average buddy movie. Bruce Willis plays Jack Mosley, a world-weary cop assigned to transport a witness to the courthouse. Predictably trouble comes every which way. Willis is his usual charming self, while Mos Def, as the witness, is becoming an actor to really watch.

Aquamarine

Okay, it would be ludicrous to claim that this story about two twelve-year-old girls and a mermaid was anything but kitsch with a very limited audience. That said, there is something nice about the earnest cheapness of the whole affair. The screenwriters are fresh from TV ("Sex and the City," and less impressively "Joey"), it's the director's first feature, and neither girl is Dakota Fanning.

Ultraviolet

Late in the 21st century, a sub-section of humanity has become infected with a disease that turns them into some sort of vampires. A war is looming between these Hemophages and the normal, uninfected populace. Absurdly silly, of course, and there are grumbles that the special effects are not all they could be, but it moves quickly and Milla Jovovich is suitably enigmatic in the title role.

Eight Below

Two explorers find themselves stranded in the Antarctic following an accident. Their dogs escape into a nature-film sequence, leaving the men to struggle back to camp. Paul Walker may be a pretty face but this alone is not enough to sustain the soul-searching that the story requires. This is Frank Marshall's first time in the director's seat since 1995's Congo. It has not been worth the wait.

Freedomland

Mining the same vein of overblown, race-obsessed nonsense as Paul Haggis' Crash, but with an even cheaper plot, this is Joe Roth's follow up to the wretched Christmas with the Kranks. A white mother loses her son and accuses a black man of kidnapping him, causing public controversy which requires the sleuthing powers of Samuel L. Jackson and Julianne Moore. A high-budget, no-brainer Lifetime movie.

Winter Passing

Reese Holden (Zoëy Deschanel) is the actress-daughter of Don (Ed Harris), a Salinger-esque recluse. When a publisher offers Reese a fat pay-off to get hold of the love letters her father wrote to her recently-dead mother, she is forced to face her past. This is all far less cheesy than it sounds and Deschanel is enchanting. Don't let co-star Will Ferrell put you off. This is slow, serious and worthwhile drama.

Curious George

The children's classic comes to the screen in simple but effective animated form. Of course nothing will stop the chorus of voices crying that this is sacrilege, but at worst this is harmless and at best, charming. Will Ferrell, Drew Barrymore and David Cross (from "Arrested Development") provide the voices.

Firewall

Harrison Ford has been off the radar for some time now and this mediocre thriller from the director of the wretched Wimbledon is no glorious return to form. Here he plays Jack Stanfield, a security executive for a large company that he is forced to rob to pay a ransom for his family. "24" has the monopoly on the loved-ones-held-hostage genre, making this wholly unnecessary.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood in The Hamptons

It's a given that there's a fine, razor thin edge that separates the ridiculous from the sublime or the great from the cheesy. Pity the woe-begotten observer who must walk that cutting edge, as if with bare feet. Therefore, wear cleated boots when you go to see Freedomland, starring Samuel L. Jackson and Julianne Moore. I quickly threw "starring" at you because they give that credit everything they have. Their star "turns" spin with such earnestness and zeal, you will be bowled over with impressed elation or simply puff out, Oof-ah! Enough's enough, already!

Sure, it is very difficult to criticize bravura performances. Gee, they tried so hard. Well, then consider the film Freedomland itself. It pushes, flings and foists upon you every do-good proposition regarding racial intolerance and inequity. Can you argue with that? Of course, as a hyper-activated thriller, you'll have to say, "Hey, it's going to get to more people." But, wait just a sec'. Is it great or just a piece of over-ripe cheese?

As a start: Richard Price's screenplay from his novel is less a self-motivating drama than it is a social studies thesis on a burning, red-hot subject that is fanned to a fare-thee-well. So much that the premise fizzles even as it glows so brilliantly. Take Ms. Moore. As Brenda, she crazily enters a hospital ranting and bleeding profusely from her hands. Mr. Jackson, a local detective and peacemaker at a predominantly black New Jersey housing project, is there to attend to her problem. She is the sister of a cop in a neighboring white town. She works in the day care center and is well liked by the project's residents. However, when she announces, "A black man did it," the words sear like a branding iron. Mr. Jackson's Lorenzo Council is stricken tragically upon hearing the perpetrator made her crawl over broken glass, stole her car with her son asleep on the back seat! One of the most shocking of crimes is the abduction of a child. Lorenzo Council now suffers an asthmatic attack. He is momentarily silenced by the gravity of the situation. He knows the town next door will be ignited and their (white) men in blue heatedly on the trail of an artist's rendering of the alleged criminal – the ominous black face capped by a grey sweatshirt hood. Knowing the outstanding actor, Jackson, we darn well know that Lorenzo Council will not be silent very long. Soon, his voice level will rise several decibels above that of the retired SST Concorde stratoliner. Putting him to the test is Ms. Moore's anguished mother's prattling. Her story becomes more and more unbelievable. The woman is obviously suffering a complexity of too-many-to-count breakdowns. She's been a drug addict but is now clean, she says. Detective Council is torn between compassion for her and the worry that her accusation, if false, could be detonating the explosive situation for nothing.

To their aid comes the mother's best friend, Karen Collucci, severely played by Edie Falco. She too has lost a child and heads an organization for missing children. Besides drawing out some insights from the over-wrought mother, she puts together a volunteer group to scour the woods for the four-year-old. And so the clock ticks on more urgently than ever. At least the chaotic mother's friend believes her. Maybe she didn't murder her own son. She might have been a tad more believable if she had done something about her dangling, scraggly hair before going to the police.

Perhaps the movie might have been more believable if its director, Joe Roth (Christmas With The Kranks), hadn't cranked up so much Hollywood idealism as opposed to New Jersey didactic realism. The Hallelujah angelic choral behind the race riot exposes his techniques as blatantly as the sight of the manipulating "Wizard of Oz" operating wheels and switches behind the curtain. Mr. Price's screenplay also pushes the audience with swiveling good-bad revelations by Ms. Moore's mother brought about by Mr. Jackson's detective and Ms. Falco's missing-child leader. It's feeling for and outrage concerning "the children," "black anger," "cop mobism" and the tracery of "guilt," become as challenged as Ms. Moore's mother's grasp of grammar and downright, over-done bleakness.

Freedomland is made up of many thorny roads of good intentions. The decision as to whether or not the journey through its lacerating nicks is worth it is only yours to make. Tough, ain't it?

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

This is a tale of two pastas – Spaghetti alla Puttanesca and Bucatini all' Amatriciana. I became familiar with these pastas on a trip to Italy many years ago and included them in a cookbook I wrote in 1985. In recent months, versions of the recipes have turned up in newspaper articles, cooking magazines and on the Food Network. They have become among the most popular pasta recipes for their simplicity and excellence.

There are a number of explanations for the origins of the name Puttanesca, a sauce prepared by or for "woman of the street." One recipe I ran across implied this strong and flavorful dish was offered to entice customers, another suggested it was prepared for their own sustenance (this interpretation seems fitting) or favored by woman who wanted to serve a quick meal at home. However the dish came about, its popularity is well deserved. Cook a simple tomato sauce, then combine a room temperature garnish to toss with the cooked pasta. Bucatini all' amatriciana is related to spaghetti alla carbonara, a decadently rich dish made with eggs and cream but the simple and highly spiced amatriciana treatment replaces the fat with tomatoes, a healthy and contemporary idea indeed!

SPAGHETTI ALLA PUTTANESCA

The Italian word Puttanesca refers to a woman of dubious character. For me the dish means something delicious with a character all its own.

Serves 6-8

4 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 can (2 pounds, 3 ounces) plum tomatoes, drained and coarsely chopped
2 tablespoons julienne of fresh basil leaves
Freshly ground pepper
Pinch red pepper flakes
1 tin anchovy fillets, drained and chopped
3 tablespoons capers
1/3 cup black Greek olives, pitted
1-2 tablespoons kosher salt for the cooking water
1 pound spaghetti

1. Heat 2 tablespoons oil in a skillet and quickly sauté garlic, being careful not to brown. Add tomatoes, basil, several grinds of pepper and red pepper flakes. Stir to mix and simmer about 15-20 minutes. (Sauce may be prepared one day ahead, refrigerated and reheated for serving.) Separately combine anchovies, capers and olives in a small dish or bowl and set aside. Anchovy mixture may be prepared up to two hours ahead.

2. When ready to serve, bring 5 quarts water to a rolling boil and add salt. Put spaghetti in all at once, stirring to separate strands. Return immediately to the boil, then cook briskly about 8 minutes until tender but firm to the bite (al dente). While pasta cooks, reheat sauce over low heat and keep warm.

3. Drain pasta in a colander. Transfer to a warm serving bowl, drizzle over remaining 2 tablespoons olive oil and toss to mix. Add warm tomato sauce and toss again. Scatter anchovy, caper and olive mixture over the top and serve immediately on warm plates.

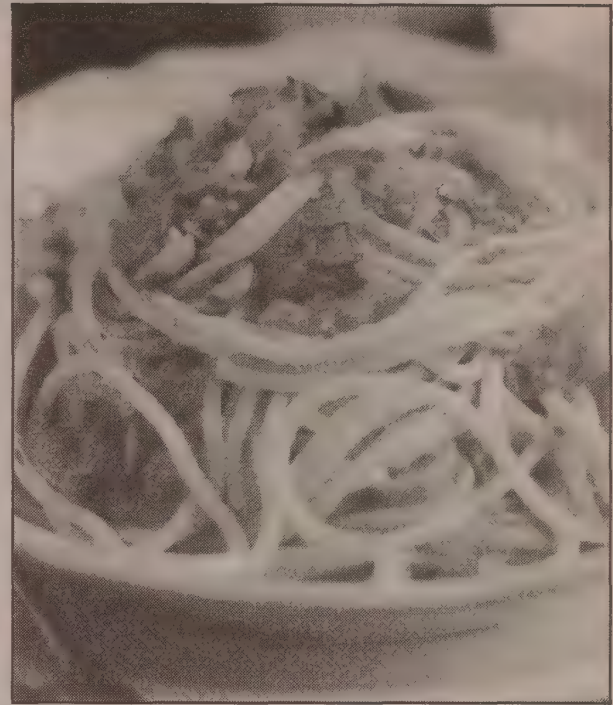

BUCATINI ALL' AMATRICIANA

This simple and highly spiced sauce originated in Amatrice, near Rome. Bucatini and Perciatelli are thick spaghetti with a hollow center to "catch" the sauce. Bucatini is slightly thicker than perciatelli. Either is appropriate for the sauce.

Served 4-6

3 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
1 medium red onion
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
6 ounces pancetta, cut into 1/8-inch dice
1 can (1 pound, 12 ounces) plum tomatoes
1 small dried hot pepper, snipped fine, about 1/2 teaspoon
1/2 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1 pound bucatini or perciatelli
1-2 tablespoons coarse (kosher) salt for the cooking water
4-5 tablespoons freshly grated Pecorino Romano or Parmesan cheese

1. Heat oil in a large 12-inch skillet and sauté onion until translucent, about 3 minutes. Add garlic and cook, stirring for 1 minute longer. Add pancetta and cook for several minutes until slightly crisp. Add tomatoes, hot pepper and salt. As the sauce cooks, cut into the sides of the tomatoes with a large wooden spoon or spatula to break them up. Cook over medium heat, uncovered, for about 25 minutes. Remove from heat and taste to adjust seasoning if necessary.

Can be done ahead and reheated when ready to cook the pasta.

2. Bring 5-6 quarts water to a rolling boil and add coarse salt. Put the pasta in all at once and cook at a brisk simmer for about 8 minutes until firm to the bite (al dente). Drain immediately in a colander, shaking to rid excess water. Transfer to the reheated sauce in the skillet and toss to mix. Add the grated cheese and mix thoroughly. Taste for seasonings. Serve at once with additional cheese at table.

JUST FOR KIDS

Playing Away the Long Days of Summer

Summer is not here yet, obviously, since it is nineteen degrees right now, and winter is very much upon us. But there is a light at the end of the tunnel. Children in particular are anticipating the arrival of warm sunny days that glide into glowing twilights, providing a backdrop for playing soccer until the goal disappears in the dusk, for catching fireflies once night arrives, and for resting up just enough to bounce out of bed and run to the beach in the morning.

Free time, without the bounds of school and homework, is a glorious treat for a kid, but a little structure, learning and some playtime with new friends is great punctuation for the months of looser schedules. The Art Farm summer camp program in Bridgehampton offers a range of activities to occupy, delight, teach and enliven the summer months for kids from ages one to fifteen.

Ten years ago, Mari Linnman founded the Art Farm as a summer day camp where children could experience "farm culture," and Mommy and Me classes were the first programs. Waiting lists inspired expansion, and now, the Art Farm has become a destination for children of all ages to experience summer fun in all its guises.

The half-day schedule, designed to be both nurturing and stimulating for three and four year olds, includes: pony rides, baking (goodies are sold to raise funds for charity), arts and crafts, animal education, tennis, music, drama, animal care and nature projects.

For slightly older children and teenagers, the full-day program offers experiences and lessons to suit every taste, and half of the full day can even be set aside for a particular activity your child loves. Offered are: rock climbing, organic gardening, martial arts, woodshop, skateboarding, photography, computer animation, pony camp, ceramics, basketball, drama, dance and much more.

Water sports have become a main focus of the Art Farm, and the Riders Program, a dedicated schedule of water sports that includes surfing, wakeboarding, boogie boarding, tubing and others, has become very popular over the last three years since its inception. This year, there will be time set aside to determine the skill level and experience of each child who is interested in learning fun and safe ways to practice these sports, and thus the categories will grow to include entry level and Junior Riders.

-RFS

The Art Farm boasts a dazzling rainbow of choices, and complete information can be found on their website, www.theartfarms.org, or by calling 631-537-1634.

When In Manhattan...BY OLIVER PETERSON

Biennial is Back

I attended the School of Visual Arts in Manhattan for four years. In art school you spend a lot of time talking about art, going to shows, smoking cigarettes, drinking, trying to be like Jackson Pollock without actually being a real alcoholic, maybe romancing the just pre-suicide Mark Rothko who stumbled around painting black paintings, drinking, smoking, and possibly naked. It was a silly, pretentious, and incredibly fun time in my life. Art was everything for those four years. And one of the biggest shows in the city which art students look forward to is the Whitney Biennial.

The Biennial is the premiere survey of contemporary art and often the first major public outing for young artists. It is because of this that it is also a favorite for ambitious and angry students. The typical New York City art student likes to vent his or her jealousy by bashing all the work in the Whitney's show. It's tradition. If you watch HBO's "Six Feet Under," Claire's art school experience, while it might be in California, is an expertly drawn picture of the overblown comedy that is art school with all its posturing, drama, and self-importance. Seriously, we did like to trash-talk, but the Biennial is also a place to take the temperature of the art world and see what and who is getting picked up by galleries and collectors. The 2006 Whitney Biennial opens the day this paper comes out, and the curators just recently announced this year's artists and a first – the title.

The 2006 Biennial "Day for Night" is the first to have a title. The name comes from the 1973 film by Francois Truffaut – originally in French as La Nuit Americaine – which describes the film technique of shooting night scenes during the day using an artificial filter. Curator Chrissie Iles said "Day for Night explores the artifice of American culture in what could be described as a pre-Enlightenment moment, in which culture is preoccupied with the irrational, the religious, the dark, the erotic, and the violent, filtered by the sense of flawed beauty. This reflective, restless mood is not unique to the United States; its presence across both America and Europe suggests a shift in the accepted values that have formed the basis of 20th century Western culture." It's no wonder that people can get a bit annoyed. Curator Philippe Vergne continued Iles' thought by stating that, "This moment of questioning characterizes the broad context for the current moment in contemporary art." The question and the space between "day and night" is where the curators believe today's crop of artists are working. This kind of stuff is exactly what the art student must consistently try to unscramble. The Biennial is famous for inciting arguments between artists and critics alike. It's frequently slammed, but there's usually some really good work and the heated dialogue is welcomed by most.

This year has an interesting crop of artists working in all visual forms. Gedi Sibony, for example, is a perfect artist for debate. He has been given his own room at the Biennial, and will display his sculptures made from the most unassuming of materials. Sibony is known for creating minimalist pieces from packing tape, carpet scraps, wooden doors, cardboard, and fiberboard. Without close inspection, one might look past the work, unsure it had been actually unpacked. It prompts questions about what needs to go into a piece in order to make it fine art. Viewers will take sides concerning this artist, and that's what the Biennial is for. Kelley Walker uses photographic imagery and advertising in his work. The work in the Biennial is some of his better stuff. He uses enlarged red newspaper images of racial unrest shown sideways and punctuated with splattered chocolate. They are actually quite arresting. It's a big show with a lot to see and think about if only to bring one to consider the state of art today, the Biennial is worth a look. It will set the mood for two years of art criticism.

The Whitney Museum of American Art is located at 945 Madison Ave. at 75th Street. 1-800-WHITNEY.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

The past few weeks I have been describing hikes that you can take from the proposed parking area just south of the CR 114/Edwards Hole Road intersection. Another hike you can take from here is to the Barcelona Neck Preserve. Parking almost a mile away from the preserve, when you could just drive north on CR 114, past Edwards Hole Road and Swamp Road and turn right on Russell's Neck Road to Sag Harbor Golf Course parking area may seem silly. Most hikers do park by the golf course but there is no designated parking for hikers here, and the parking areas along the trails have signs stating, "Hunters Only." In an earlier article I wrote for Dan's Papers, I suggested parking at the Edwards Hole Road / Swamp Road intersection. Charles Whalen's East Hampton map shows this as a roadside parking area. There is no formal trailhead parking here; presently this is the case with most of the trailheads in Suffolk County. This is why the effort by East Hampton Trails Preservation Society to facilitate a formal parking area at CR 114 is so important.

To get to this trailhead, take Stephens Hand Path to CR 114, turn left and travel 1.9 miles north to the proposed trailhead, located just south of the Edwards Hole Road intersection. Do not block the entrance to Edwards Hole Road; local residents would then have to drive north to Swamp Road and enter their road from the other direction.

Much of Edwards Hole Road is currently an unimproved dirt road. When the trailhead project is finished, this connection to the NYS DEC Blue Trail will have to be blazed to keep people from walking onto private property. The dirt road passes two trails to the right and a pond to the left. After about a half mile

the road surface is paved for a short distance. Follow this road across Swamp Road onto another unmarked dirt road, East Side Road. Where the road seems to head to the right, up a driveway, head straight around a mound of earth and past an East Hampton Town Preserve sign instead. After a short distance, you will see where the blue-blazed disks of the DEC trail cut across this woods road. Turn right, off the woods road, onto the trail. To the left, the trail runs south into the swamp and disappears. If you were to continue walking on the woods road you would see the golf course to your left. The trail takes you parallel to the road, through a mature pine forest. You can get glimpses of Northwest Creek to the right. The blue blazes are old and beginning to fall off the trees, but the trail can be followed. Just before the trail reconnects with East Side Road, you will see remnants of an old structure. Here, a spur trail to the right runs out to "Cuffee's Landing," affording a view of the creek. Along the trail there are numerous NYS DEC signs stating "Access By Permit Only"; for a free permit call (631) 444-0273. There are several trails cutting across the Barcelona Point peninsula; you will recognize them by the vertical poles that block vehicular access. These cross trails are pleasant to walk. If you follow the blue markers they will take you onto the Second Crossing Trail. Soon you will come to a point where the trail takes a right turn and cuts across to the Third Crossing Trail. If you turn right here instead of following the trail to the left, this will take you to East Side Road. Follow this woods road north to Channel Landing with its lovely shoreline and vistas. Don't continue all the way north on this road, because it leads to a private driveway. Follow the road back south and turn right onto Third Crossing Road. Walk until you find the blue trail; follow it up to, and along the northern edge of the peninsula. The sand from the bluffs is being blown south over the trail and into the woods. Several little paths lead to the top of these "walking dunes" giving an incredible panoramic view of Northwest Harbor. I met a hunter here who said that these trails are excellent for cross-country skiing. After traversing the top of the peninsula, the trail takes you onto West Side Road. Pass a couple of access points to the water, pass Salt Pond on the right and Second Crossing Road on the left, then continue south to the next crossing road. Follow First Crossing Road to East Side Road, turn left, back north a short distance to Cuffee's Landing where the blue disks lead back to Edwards Hole Road.

Next week, yet another hike from this proposed trailhead!

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

While we are enjoying this sometime warmer weather and the daylight hours are lasting longer, we are heading into the next season; Spring! Most of the shops are offering late winter and early spring sales, so let's do some shopping!

At Christopher Fischer Cashmere on Jobs Lane in Southampton and Main Street in East Hampton you will find the new spring 2006 merchandise all ready to go. While you're there enjoy the "End Of Winter Sale" with from 60% to 70% off winter merchandise. There is so much to choose from, so get going.....

At English Country Antiques on North Sea Road in Southampton and Snake Hollow Road in Bridgehampton, look for the "Luxury Linen Sale" that is in progress right now. Included in this spectacular winter sale are manufacturers such as Bellora, Cottimaryanne, Dea, Frette, Traditions by Pamela Kline, Signoria Di Firenze and Souleiado to name just a few. Get those bedrooms ready for your guests this summer and stock up while the sale is offering such buys.

Sit back and enjoy your favorite TV programs, and save some bucks.....On Main Street in Southampton at Hildreth's, if you buy one recliner, you get one free or just pay as low as $299 for only one. The East Hampton store Home East is also offering the very same savings.....

Nancy & Co. is still running its "Semi Annual - Nancy is Out Of Town Sale" that we are all familiar with. But.....now you can save more than ever here with their drastically reduced prices at 50% to 90% off.....Wow!

At Windows & Walls Unlimited on County Road 39 in Southampton you don't have to pay the tax with their "No Tax Sale" until March 4 on Hunter Douglas products, drapery, slipcovers and cushions.

The Piano Barn on Montauk Highway in Water Mill is having a piano clearance and winter sale with great buys on selected mint condition pianos. They offer free tuning and delivery!

Are you ready to get set and get going? At Core Dynamics Health Fitness located at 58 Deerfield Road in Water Mill, you can get a 15% discount with an annual membership and if you join with a friend, which most of us do, you get an extra month free. You will find state of the art strength training and cardiovascular rooms that include a Cybex VR 3 Full Body Circuit, private personal training, group fitness classes, message therapy and more.

Mark Anthony Rugs on Montauk Highway in Wainscott has a big barn filled to the rafters with handmade rugs in all sizes and patterns. This is the place to go for something different and unusual for your home or office. Believe me it's worth the trip!

East Hamptons Down Factory Store at the Elegant John on Montauk Highway will keep you warm and cozy for the rest of the winter season with their "Inventory Sale" on fine Polish Down Comforters that are now $274.99. There is a 1/3 off lamp sale, as well as similar savings on hotel towels, featherbeds, 100% down pillows and much more.

I decided to stop in Sag Harbor before I headed home and take the 'stroll' down Main Street where I found at Illusions, one half off on selected jewelry. They have great stuff here, such as watches, bags, wallets, and those much sought after optical quality "cheater glasses" at affordable prices.

Nearby at Punch, you will find a "Winter Sale" on children's clothing. You will love this store.

At Simpatico, there is a sale on clogs, boots, handbags and hard to find men's shoes.

One of my favorites, Australian Femininity, is where you will find fabulous clothing and accessories for women; there is a 40% off sale on select merchandise.

For a neat, clean and simple look, stop in at In Home for their sale and clearance on selected merchandise. There are sofas, lighting, home accessories and much more to choose from here.

And last but not least, stop into the famous old-fashioned (5&10) Sag Harbor Variety for a look at the selected merchandise sale that is going on right now.

At Andrew & Co., right across the street there is a "Red Dot" sale in progress on great winter clothing and accessories for kids. Nearby at Satori, they are offering a 50% off sale on ladies clothing and accessories.

Shopping Extravaganza on the North Fork: If you have "Cabin Fever" fuggedaboutit! Dan's HOME Guide

Dine Like the Danish – the People, not the Pastry

nb: This article salutes traditions in the culture of Denmark that are in addition to the right of free speech.

—RFS

The Danes have a word for the feeling of cordiality, friendship, and comfort associated with spending an evening at a friend's house for dinner: it's called hyggelig. Such occasions provide people with a chance to make new acquaintances, enjoy good Danish cuisine, and simply relax and have fun.

For Danes, the main meal of the day is dinner (middag), which may consist of meats, fish, vegetables, and dessert. Drinks served with dinner are usually regional beers or wine.

A typical dinner party is served from 6 to 8 p.m. The guests usually arrive early and a good bottle of red wine is served to get things going. People usually sit in the living room while the dinner is finishing cooking. The actual meal begins with the required toast with aquavit (i.e., "water of life," a Danish spirit) in which all the guests are welcomed. You must lift the shot glass to almost eye level but never higher and look the people around the table in the eyes and say skål (pronounced "skoal," Danish for cheers). Unlike people in many other countries, they do not touch glasses in salute.

The host and hostess sit at opposite ends of the table. The female guest of honor is offered the seat to the right of the host, and the male guest of honor will be seated to the right of the hostess. Name cards are frequently placed at each place setting.

The traditional Danish dinner party begins with soup, followed by a seafood appetizer, the main meat course with a salad, and ends with dessert. White wine is often served with the soup and appetizer, red wine with the meat dish, and a sweet red wine with dessert. The main course usually takes 3 hours to complete since people love to converse about various things during this time. Coffee is served after dinner.

Fresh homemade breads and/or thin flatbreads often accompany the evening meal. It is common for dinner parties to continue until 1 a.m. In Denmark, dinner parties in the summer can last until 11 or 11:30 p.m.; in the winter, they usually end around 10 p.m. Therefore, if dinner is over sooner, expect to have coffee or a liqueur or perhaps a walk before the party is actually over.

The key to eating at one of these dinner parties is to take a little bit of food at a time. The main course and side dishes will usually be passed around 3 or 4 times. Danish etiquette requires that people hold their forks in their left hand, while their knives stay in the right. The continental style of dining, in which you cut food with the knife in your right hand and your fork in your left hand, never switched, is a must. Diners bring the food to their mouths with the fork tines pointing down.

On some occasions, there will be a smorgasbord, a Danish buffet also called det store kold bord. This popular way to serve a meal consists of a large table of seafood, meats, breads, vegetables, and desserts served buffet-style. This way of presenting food is popular at dinner parties. The smorgasbord is not actually a Danish custom, although there are smorgasbord type dishes and restaurants. Danish specialties include beef tartare (usually served with raw egg), herring, and meatballs. There is a special Danish soup called ollebrod, which is a combination of beer, rye bread, lemon, and sugar. Lagkage, a renowned Danish dessert, is a trifle-like layer cake made of custard, whipped cream, and fruits.

It is not unusual to drink a lot of wine at a dinner party. If a person doesn't drink wine, there is always Danish beer. Guests must make certain that their glasses don't wind up empty because someone might just initiate a skål unexpectedly and no one would want to be caught without something to say cheers with.

When the main course is finished, the table is cleared and coffee is prepared. The adults retire to the living room for coffee and cake. If there are children, they are allowed to go into another room with cake and soda to watch TV and entertain themselves. The dessert portion of the evening can last 1 or 2 hours.

If the evening has gone well, the guests will offer the ultimate compliment to the hosts. They will say that the evening was hyggelig and promise to return for another dinner party.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Think of Holly

While holly is typically thought of around Christmas because of its showy berries, it is an ideal plant to consider as part of early spring planting. In the sandy soil of the East End hollies do extremely well – with their tolerance of a variety of growing conditions. Gardeners have used this versatile plant in a number of different ways: foundation plantings, borders, as privacy screens and hedges, and as formal specimens.

Hollies are mostly evergreen, though there are a few that are deciduous. All holly trees and shrubs are dioecious – meaning there are separate male and female plants – both of which need to be in the same location if the female plant is to produce berries. Generally speaking, a male plant is required within about forty feet of a female plant if it is to produce berries. (Male plants do not produce berries, but do produce beautiful leaves and tiny white or yellow-white flowers.)

Hollies are very versatile and can be grown as bushy shrubs or as small specimen trees. Their dense, slow-growing habit makes them suitable as topiaries, and also for windbreaks or burglar deterrents. The color of the berries varies from bright red to scarlet, black, yellow and purple.

Holly plants are among the few shrubs that successfully grow in all fifty states of the United States. The plants occur naturally on all the continents in the world except for Australia and Antarctica. There are about 400 species in all. The most popular varieties are the American Holly (ilex opaca) and the English Holly (ilex aquifolium). Some of the English holly varieties grow very tall. So, it is wise to investigate the mature size of a holly before purchasing it.

The American hollies are native to the Atlantic and Southeastern States. It is reported the pilgrims first saw American hollies when they landed in Massachusetts in 1620. These versatile plants produce lovely berries and vibrant, shiny leaves. One of the better varieties to look for is a plant called "Mac's Prince." It grows to about 30 feet tall and ten-to-twenty feet wide. It is highly sought after for its bright scarlet berries.

The English hollies seem to do well in both sun and shade, though the foliage is denser in full sun. One of the better English cultivars to look for is named "Ferox Argentea," and reaches a height of about fifteen feet and spreads to about ten feet. Be careful when purchasing English hollies, as some can grow to fifty feet tall or more.

All hollies do best when they have some protection from exposure to cold winter winds and excessively hot summer sun. They also prefer to grow in acidic soils, which is why they frequently grow in the wild in oak forests.

Hollies are good plants to consider for early spring planting. As mature plants are reactive to having their roots disturbed, be sure to select younger plants. We recommend planting hollies from mid-March through April before their new growth appears. Consider planting hollies anytime after the ground has thawed. Dig a hole a little larger than the root ball and mix in a handful or two of acid fertilizer with the excavated soil before placing the root ball in the hole. Backfill with soil, water well, and mulch with a two-to-four inch layer of wood chips or other coarse mulch to keep the roots cool and moist.

Transplanted hollies may drop some of their leaves when transplanted. If this occurs, be careful not to over-water, but just keep the soil moist. As the plant establishes itself, allow it to dry a little towards the end of the summer growing season. This helps the leaves harden off and helps them to resist winter damage. In the first year do not fertilize hollies further once planted. Subsequently, the plant can be fertilized with an acid fertilizer each spring.

Hollies respond well to pruning. Pruning should be done in late fall, after the plants go dormant. This pruning will leave some canes exposed. The canes will fill in when spring growth starts. Hollies respond equally well to heavy pruning to reshape or train them.

Hollies attract a number of species of birds. These include thrushes, blackbirds, wild turkeys, goldfinches, mourning doves, sparrows, and bobwhites.

Nothing is more beautiful than a holly in winter with its lovely berries. While the plants take a long time to grow, they are well worth the effort. Every garden ought to have at least one specimen!

Telling a Story With Books

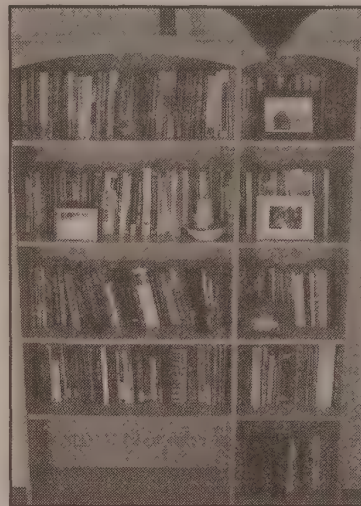

Home decorating. The words conjure up ideas of furniture, rugs, paint colors, wall art, and cabinetry. Rarely do we think of books as decoration. And yet there are very few homes that do not have at least one shelf of books somewhere in easy reach. Making books more interesting in the home décor can be fun, interesting, and challenging.

Let us begin by disregarding those extensive series of somberly leather-bound and gilt-engraved series that are seen in English period pieces. That is cheating, and boring. Fill up your bookcases with such cold and meaningless space eaters and you label yourself pretentious and probably not very well read, either. And you might want to go easy on just how far you go to have your books fit in with your décor. A local house tour recently featured a lovely home, on the water, all done in the then-trendy sand/ecru/beige/cream/color scheme, and I suddenly realized that the floor-to-ceiling bookcase held only books with sand/ecru/beige/cream-colored covers. An interesting theory of book selection, for sure, and effective in a weird kind of way, but probably not really reflective of the owners. Your book décor should reflect you: your interests, your reading history, your special treasures, your field of study, your local environment, and such.

I do practice what I preach. My bookshelves are full of books that will tell you about me and what is important to me. One might suspect that I, as an ex-librarian (is there such a thing? Once a librarian, always a librarian?), would maintain strict, if not Dewey Decimal, order. But no. While my books are roughly in subject order, there are some hints as to what is where, and the hint to the order is family pictures. For example, the photo of my five granddaughters (who are sisters) lying on the beach leaning on their elbows and grinning at me share a shelf with such titles as Sisterhood is Powerful, New York Women, Ladies Auxiliary, and The Women's Room. A picture of my daughter holding her two-year-old son as he pats a horse on the nose sits beside Seabiscuit, The Horse Whisperer, Horse Heaven, and my set of Dick Francis' racing novels. In a rather extensive case of Bibles, prayer books, works on Mary Magdalene and feminist theology are interspersed photos of various grandchildren over the years celebrating their First Communion (in all of which, I recently realized, I am wearing the same outfit). On a shelf with books on aging is perhaps my favorite photo; a picture of my father at 92 striding off into his beloved North Haven woods with the hands of two small great-grandsons firmly clasped on each side.

I have several friends who have given me copies of their books; they deserve a special place. Perhaps you have written books yourself; spotlight those. Perhaps you have a special collection of signed-by-the-author titles; that can be an interesting display. A low table behind my couch holds my collection of books on Long Island, sometimes in the summer exchanged for books on gardening and, at Christmas, for titles appropriate to the season.

Lots more is possible when you use books as furniture. Moving away from ordinary wall shelves, a bookcase is an effective divider between rooms. Use it to separate the kitchen from the family room, for example, with cookbooks on kitchen side and children's books on the family room side. A stack of oversized art books can be piled up and used as an end table, perhaps with a piece of glass on top to protect them.

If you want to go even further with that, check out www.vestaldesign.com/projects/bookbar, and learn how to create a corner bar out of books, as these designers did using books discarded by the Stanford University library. Or visit <http://theory.lcs.mit.edu/classes/bookbuild/> and see how students at MIT responded to the challenge of creating useful objects from books.

Of course, creations such as this render the books unusable. If that is all right with you, give it a try. There are many used bookstores and thrift shops in the area where you can find books you might not mind using for such purposes. But if you want to preserve the integrity of your own collection, find ways to display it that challenge the imagination and delight the heart.

Dan's HOME Guide

To the Manor Born

If you're tired of the post-modern-cedar-shingle look and you would prefer your summerhouse to be a stately home, why not go the route of the British manor? Getting the true feel is going to take a little work, but it is well worth it. There are three materials you will need to remember: stone, plaster, and wood. One of the first things you notice in a true British manor is the fireplace, or more fittingly, the fireplaces. Many of these are huge, five or six feet in height. Generally they are framed with great slabs of manicured limestone. The mantle can be either wood or matching stone, depending on your preference. Clearly, you will need to inform your architect about where and how many there are going to be before you start constructing the house.

British stately homes were built before the invention of sheet rock, so unless you're wallpapering (which is an option), you're going to need a little more texture on your walls. If you're starting with a bare room (framed and sheet rocked), there are a few things to do before you start with the plaster. A fairly easy way to get that manor feel is to incorporate wooden lintels in all the doorways of the home. Today, you don't have to use full size pieces of wood, which weigh a ton and cost just as much. Purchase a dark wood, possibly mahogany, walnut, or even stained poplar, at your local lumberyard. The length of the piece of wood should be a few inches longer than the width of the door. The width should be four to six inches and its depth should be about 2 to 3 inches. Before installing the lintel, distress it. Using a hand plane, shave the corners of the wooden plank. Use a gouge to remove wood from the face of the wood, giving it character and an aged look. The amount of work on the wood is up to you; after all, it's your house.

Find the studs above the doorframe and mark them on the wood. Drill holes the diameter of the screw head half-way through the wood and screw the lintel above the door. Sink the screws and fill the holes with wooden plugs.

Wooden accents can also be achieved by creating artificial beams in the ceiling. In a similar fashion to the lintels, work a dark wood with a plane and gouge, then install to ceiling. The one thing to note is that generally these pieces of wood are thicker in depth than the lintels and will descend from the ceiling further into the room. If it looks like they show too much, don't worry. When you apply the plaster, the walls and ceiling will fill out.

Once your wood accents have been added, you may want to raise the stakes a bit and add stone. You can use cultured stone, or natural stone veneer, but I would avoid using full pieces of stone unless you have already made plans for it in the blueprints. Using full stones will push out of the wall too far and will look awkward. An ideal place to use stone is around windows. Framing the windows with stone gives the illusion of depth and strength to the walls. The options here are up to you regarding how much or little stone you want to show.

Now it's time to apply plaster. Apply the plaster onto the walls and ceiling to the desired thickness. It should cover part of the wood and stone's thickness, which will give the illusion of thick strong walls.

As for the floor, why not go all out? Victorian Woodworks is a company in London that acquires floors from old churches, breweries, and factories throughout Great Britain, remills them and creates beautiful, new, old-world floors and they'll even ship them to the U.S. If this is too much, look locally. Heritage Wide Plank Flooring in Baiting Hollow can provide fantastic options for rustic, old-world flooring. Some parquet designs are fine, but anything too intricate, with fine detail, will take the house more toward a Georgian townhouse and away from the Tudor manor style.

With walls, ceilings, and floors finished, doors should be next on your list. Oversized doors can have a great effect. Choose dark, preferably antique or at least solid, wood. If you opt for the oversize or have discovered a door to build the room around, make sure your contractor knows the dimensions when they are framing the room.

Fine details? When in doubt, go tartan. Visit a website like www.houseoftartan.co.uk and choose from among their tartan designs or create your own. Upholster dining room cushions or drapes in this earthy wool. Antique furniture is also a great way to go. The sofas shouldn't be too ornate, but there should be a focal piece in the room.

The rest is up to you and your creativity. But the best way to get a feel for the British manor is to go to Great Britain. Book your flight and bring something back with you.

What is a Fleur de Lis Anyway?

It's carved into the thrones of kings; it's painted onto stained glass windows. Joan of Arc led French troops to victory with a banner adorned with its image and Boy Scouts wear the symbol proudly on their uniforms. The fleur de lis is a recurring image in world history.

Literally translated, fleur de lis means "lily flower," but there has been much debate as to whether its roots actually lie in lilies or irises. But regardless of where it came from, the fleur de lis is a familiar symbol whose exact significance remains in question.

The fleur de lis is most commonly associated with the French monarchy. But it most certainly appeared before France even existed. There are remnants of the fleur de lis design in Ancient Egypt. Its lotus-like appearance was used to symbolize life or resurrection. Later, the fleur de lis was adopted by the ruling class of the Roman Empire. It was brought to France by King Philip I in the 11th century. His grandson, Louis VII, used the insignia on his badge. It was a blue shield with a small golden fleur de lis. It wasn't until the 13th and 14th centuries that the fleur de lis was documented in French literature, symbolizing faith, wisdom, and chivalry. In Ireland, it quickly became associated with the holy Trinity. The fleur de lis is present in the crown jewels of both Scotland and England.

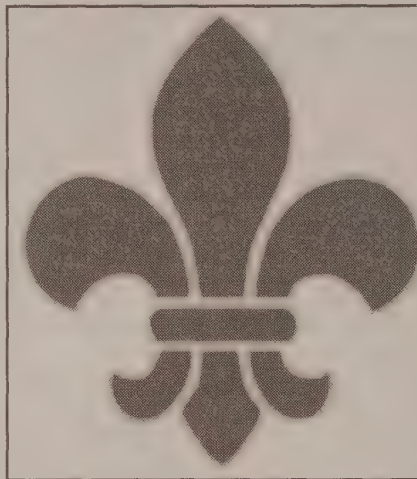

The United States has managed to turn the fleur de lis into a military symbol because of its spearhead. It is thought to symbolize martial power and strength. Also, because of its French connections, it is closely associated with the city of New Orleans.

The fleur de lis can be seen on the helmets of the football team, the New Orleans Saints. It is also very common in the art and architecture of New Orleans.

In the Scouting tradition, the fleur de lis is said to represent the compass rose, which helped the scouts find their way. To this end, the fleur de lis is symbolic of the outdoors, an integral component of the scouts. Robert Baden-Powell, founder of the scouts, said that the scouts employed the fleur de lis to represent the compass rose because "it points in the right direction (upwards) turning neither to the right nor left, since these lead backward again."

One could go on and on with the recurrence of the fleur de lis in world history. Its significance is varied, but the fact that it is significant has remained a constant. Because of its extensive history, the fleur de lis can be used to express a great variety of sentiments. Therefore, whether you are looking to decorate your house with a French flare, or if you want to remind yourself of the forces of wisdom, chivalry, and faith, the fleur de lis is a beautiful and deeply symbolic accent to your home.

The fleur de lis is incorporated into many common household items. Doorknockers, chandeliers, light switch covers, and bookends are just a few of the knick-knacks made meaningful with a fleur de lis.

The next time you are in a home décor store, keep your eyes peeled for the fleur de lis. You will see it again and again. At www.onewayfurniture.com, you can purchase beautiful carved bar stools with the fleur de lis insignia. These French leather bar stools are made of wood and have a 360-degree swivel. The list price is $719.

For a very subtle fleur de lis addition to your home, check out www.touchofclasscatalog.com. They boast a beautiful metal wall sculpture with a central medallion. Scrolls and fleur de lis burst outward from the center, and the sculpture is finished with a burnished gold. The sculpture is about 27 inches in diameter, and only costs about $40.

The fleur de lis is one of those symbols, like the lotus flower, that has transcended the ages. Its importance has never dwindled, though its meaning has fluctuated. But more than anything, it is a lovely design, easily incorporated into your home. Its significance, perhaps because it's been so varied, is not overbearing, and you are left to interpret it in any way you see fit. Now that you know a little bit about the history of the fleur de lis, you will probably notice it everywhere you go!

Dan's HOME Guide

Interior Design from A to Z with MMM

Whether you're building a home, or simply remodeling (or as we like to call it, "re-designing"), a talented interior design firm can be invaluable in achieving a beautiful interior. But it's not only about the final result. It is also about the journey. We believe it is a significant moment in our client's lives, and the process should be creative, uplifting and enjoyable. Mark M. Molin Exquisitely Finished Interiors has the following design process and management strategy that accomplishes just that.

All great interiors are born out of a three-part strategy - Design, Manage, Finish. This system works whether you are designing an entire estate or a smaller project.

The key to a successful design is that it is sensitive to a client's needs, both in style and function. Each client's vision and desire for their home is unique. Rather than following trends, we feel it is more important to reflect what stage a client is at in life. They may want a place to entertain, both for business and family. They may want to create an oasis from their hectic lives. Whether formal or casual, luxurious or country elegant, the style should capture the client's current spirit.

It is also important that the interior design complements the architecture and the architecture complements the design. It is why the interior designer and the architect must work together in the beginning. They meet with the client jointly to more effectively understand what the client desires. While the designer is the creative force for the project, the architect translates the designer's vision as it relates to space configuration, architectural details and construction feasibility.

The interior finish designer is also needed at the start to ensure the materials selected (floors, doors, trim, moldings, etc.) can be finished for the final look desired by the client.

The critical elements to a successful management strategy are communication, communication, communication. Not only do you have to communicate with the client, you have to have a communication plan. Our client's lives are all very different and have different schedules. We keep our clients constantly updated via telephone and emails, whatever and whenever it is most convenient for them, limiting the interference with their daily lives.

The project manager makes sure that the design team communicates with each other and with the client, to keep clarity of design. He facilitates between the client, designer, architect and tradesmen and manages the project to ensure the entire team works in harmony. He creates a work atmosphere that inspires the best design ideas and celebrates craftsmanship.

To ensure the design team and construction team stay on the same page, we have assembled a complete team under one roof. The project manager is the point man, coordinating the entire project from start to finish.

It is also important to have a realistic budget and timeframe before starting a project. We keep our clients constantly updated on whether they're on target. We also work with smaller contracts during the construction phase. This means our client does not have to make a large outlay at the beginning, and payments are made as work progresses. This allows the design to unfold and decisions to be made at the appropriate times.

We approach your interior design with the final look foremost in mind. A truly exquisite home is defined by authentic interior architecture, a beautiful interior design and highlighted by gorgeous interior finishes.

The interior finish designer works hand in hand with the architect, interior designer and client from start to finish. It is the interior finish designer's responsibility to ensure that the architectural materials and finishing products used satisfy the designer and homeowner by capturing the desired look and feel. It is extremely important that the colors and gloss levels of the paints and stains are just right; that they complement the whole atmosphere of the design. Gleaming floors, stunning wall colors, and fabulous architectural details really set the tone for a luxurious interior. The budget process also ensures that enough money is set aside at the beginning for the final finishing treatments.

It is an exciting experience that allows the homeowner to sit in the designer's seat and have access to our entire network. They will make all the design decisions while we handle all the intricate details. From helping the client clarify their vision to providing extensive sample assistance, performing and managing the workmanship, as well as anything else necessary to complete the project, our system is extremely time efficient, exciting and fun.

For further information or to learn more about our designer, Nancy Schein, please visit our website www.mmminteriors.net or contact Mark M. Molin at info@mmminteriors.net 631-749-9316.

Luxury Design at Blossom Haven

Choosing the right items to finish a newly-designed room can be as arduous as designing the room itself. Existing collectibles or sentimental objects can create chaos and clutter – even the most traditional country homes could benefit from a sense of order (is your bedroom really enhanced by all those patchwork pillows you collected over the years?). Likewise, a complete lack of accessories can stop any room from feeling complete and welcoming – lovers of pure modernism will admit it's nearly impossible to enjoy a family room whose sofa does not have at least one pillow or comfy throw.

Erica-Lynn Huberty, owner of Blossom Haven Interior Design, knows this particular conundrum all too well. And, luckily for her clients, she is very skillful at helping homeowners put their "best room forward." Ms. Huberty combines a vast knowledge of the technical aspects, and the history, of interior design to give homeowners coherent rooms that are beautiful and sensible.

"The great 19th Century designer William Morris said, 'Have nothing in your house that you do not believe to be useful or beautiful,'" says Ms. Huberty. "And I think that subscribing to this belief is very helpful for homeowners." Ms. Huberty also believes in "knowing your crafts – any craftsmanship that has to do with designing and decorating your home." She holds a Masters Degree in Visual Arts & Design and trained extensively with two Master Restorer/Finishers, and is an accomplished decorative painter, needle-pointer, and seamstress. All this gives her a technical edge and knowledge base beyond the ordinary interior decorator.

Some of Blossom Haven's recent projects are the transformation of a basement into an 18th Century-cottage-style residence (complete with exposed wood beams, custom cabinetry, and traditional plaster walls); decorating a Post-modern guest house with an indoor-outdoor feel; and the renovation of a 1950s bungalow to a two-story traditional shingle home with English Bloomsbury flare. In each of these instances, accessories played a large a part.

"One problem that can arise – especially when a house is not necessarily a primary home – is this feeling of sterile emptiness that people seem to inadvertently gravitate towards. There will be a lovely room with great views, big windows, and high ceilings, and you get the furniture in and it still feels completely impersonal," explains Ms. Huberty. "I think this happens because it's hard to imagine that a big, light-filled space won't be ruined by accessories, but also because it's difficult to know what to do to accentuate and compensate for certain architectural details. But the truth is, the architectural elements of a room just disappear into a non-descript space unless that space is defined by the objects in it."

In the case of the guest house, Ms. Huberty says, "We wanted to retain an indoor-outdoor feeling with French doors, lots of light, and neutral colors, but it couldn't be cold or impersonal." The client, Stephanie Finkelstein, who owns the table-top boutique The Elegant Setting in Southampton, naturally loves to collect beautiful, useable china and silver. "So why not give the guest house kitchen an antique tea pot and a great silver platter, to serve breakfast?" asks Ms. Huberty, "And why not display them on surfaces and open shelving, so they can enhance the décor?"

Mirrors also worked wonders for the space, reflecting views and light, but not allowing vast empty wall space to dominate. Floor-to-ceiling drapes in a bold floral fabric actually accentuate the windows and garden views, and help "bring the garden in" on cold, grey days. The fabric is echoed on the pillows that grace simple, beige sofas. "The colors of the Hamptons can be naturally thought of as sand, sky, water, and garden, and I wanted the accessories – whether a ceramic planter, cashmere throw, or mirror frame – to express that," Ms. Huberty explains. "And while some people might view a guest house or guest room as a place for friends to come, plunk down their bags, and sleep, it is important to remember that your guests are coming to stay with you, because they like you, and probably your style as well."

Getting Your iPod on at Home

Everyone has an iPod. Or at least it seems like that sometimes. Wherever you go – the treadmills at the gym, the subway in the City – you see tiny white buds filling people's ears as if Steve Jobs has invented some way to turn himself into an omnipresent Babel fish. And Apple's iTunes music store has become a success as well, in a symbiotic relationship that calls to mind parasitic fish on the backs of Great Whites. Over 1,000,000,000 songs have been downloaded from the iTunes Music Store, putting Apple up there with McDonald's. Though the company might have lost its way with the video iPod, they have undeniably affected the way many people listen to music.

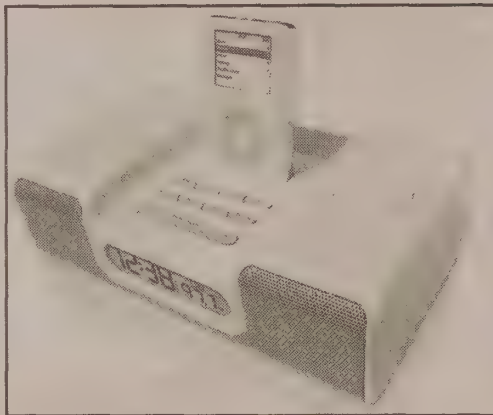

All this has led to a problem. People spend hours and hours of their workdays creating playlists. This has decreased productivity and efficiency in the workplace. Nah, just kidding. The problem is that now people want to hear their own personal soundtracks everywhere they go. Music fans spend effort and time, creating elaborate playlists, so that the song playing will always suit their mood slash the situation. You can't just leave your thirty-gig music player with six-thousand songs on it set to shuffle, can you? Do you want to be getting romantic with your lady, and have Nivana's "Breed" followed by The Misfits "Die, My Darling Die?" Of course not, that comes later. But at that moment you want to hear Al Green crooning, "Won't you help me girl as soon as you can," then Sly telling her how you cannot make it without her, followed by a little Marvin, you smooth dude, you.

This is where the big problem comes up. What's the best way to have all this music playing in your home, so that your tunes are piped in twenty-four-seven? Just playing the music through the puny speakers on your laptop from your desk will not cut it. There is the inelegant solution of running a cord with a earphone plug at one end and left and right RCA jacks at the other from your computer to your home stereo, but this should only be viewed as a quick fix.

Luckily, audio companies are trendy bastards always out to make a buck and have come to the rescue. You can buy just about anything for an iPod these days, from sets of socks in pink, orange, blue or green to outfit it and keep it warm to a robotic dog that hooks up to the iPod and dances to the music playing to a plug-in that turns the music player into a personal massager (seriously). However, amid the silliness are some truly useful gadgets that solve the problems of taking your digital music collection from the office to the car to home and back again.

One of the niftiest is called the iHome iH5 (if you haven't noticed almost all iPod accessories have the little "i" in front of them, just so you understand that it works with an iPod; this one happens to have two of those damn "i"s). The iH5 might sound like a tiny, next-generation Hummer, but it's something even better. It's a clock radio that plays your iPod. This is where you should start. Fall asleep to your iPod.

Wake up to your iPod. Read to your iPod. Get dressed to your iPod. The amplifier was designed to work with the iPod, so the sound quality is actually quite good, though it doesn't get terribly loud and can distort at the higher volumes. The speakers are perfect for filling a bedroom though, assuming you don't live in Ira Rennert's house or some other place with five-thousand-square-foot bedrooms. I have only one problem with the iH5. It won't work for me. In the morning the alarm goes off playing the last track played. Which will usually be what I fell asleep to. When the music comes on I wake up for a moment then slowly get lulled back to sleep by my Sleepy iMix. Unless I can learn to fall asleep to "Night Train" by Guns and Roses, I see this as being a continual problem.

If you are looking for something more substantial, maybe for the living room or to play at parties and aren't turned on by the clock radio aspect of the iH5, Bose makes something they call the SoundDock, one of the pricier speaker systems available at $300. The Bose name is well-known and respected, and these speakers deliver on the reputation. They are loud enough to fill a room (or two or three) and don't distort at higher volumes. The base is crisp and the sound is true at all levels. Like the iH5 this system comes with a remote about the size of a credit card and charges your iPod when it is docked.

These devices give you the freedom of having a huge store of music at your fingertips, and make it easy to fill your home with your music. A digital music player is not going to deliver the sound quality of high-end analog audio, but the convenience is worth it for most people. While these home players will not replace your stereo they will make an indispensable addition to the music in your life.

Cookbooks, It's What's for Dinner

My cookbooks and cooking magazines serve two purposes – to provide recipes and to engender conversation. One of my kitchen cabinets is filled to the brim with cookbooks and torn out recipes, and there is always at least one cookbook, along with the current month's food magazines, on my coffee table for guests to flip through. I like to throw large, gourmet, multi-course dinner parties, but I have no talent at all for making up recipes. That is why I have such a large recipe library. People often ask me how I come up with the menus for my dinner parties, and what cookbooks I would recommend. This is what I tell them.

My favorite cookbooks happen to bear the names of restaurants or restaurant chefs. To me, it is lots of fun to serve something at a dinner party that one might have ordered or seen on the menu at a top-notch restaurant. Also, in this age of celebrity chefs and the Food Network, the restaurant cookbooks often have the most creative recipes. This is not to say that there is no place for old classics or even new cookbooks that are not based on a restaurant's menu – ultimately, one's choice of cookbooks must reflect the home chef's taste. If you are excited about the recipes in a particular cookbook, you will want to make them.

I have three cookbooks that I use more than all of the others. Jean-George Vongerichten's eponymous cookbook, written with Mark Bittman of the New York Times, features surprisingly easy recipes. Jean-George is best known for his French/Asian fusion cooking, and this cookbook does not disappoint there, plus the new-American recipes (when you are just tired of lemongrass and Thai chilies) are delicious too. I find his soups (including garlic soup!) and salads (such as beet/ginger) particularly wonderful.

I also rely heavily on Mario Batali's Babbo Cookbook, particularly for pasta dishes. Batali fans know he is the consummate new-Italian chef. And although some of his recipes are a bit adventurous for me (just as are some of his restaurant's menu items), every dish I have made from this cookbook has been a hit, particularly the "mint love letters" which are ravioli filled with mint, peas and cheese, served with a spicy lamb sausage tomato sauce.

I also could not live without Danny Meyer and Michael Romano's Second Helpings from Union Square Café, which is the second Union Square Café cookbook. I was never fond of the first one, but Second Helpings has provided countless wonderful recipes, particularly for main courses. Having made the salt-baked chicken recipe with its morel cream sauce, all other chicken seems just ordinary to me.

Some other cookbooks that deserve mention are Tom Colicchio's Thinking Like a Chef and The Craft of Cooking, Claudia Flemming's The Last Course, and Eric Ripert and Maguy Le Coze's Le Bernardin Cookbook. The two books by Colicchio, of Gramercy Tavern and Craft, are less about recipes and more about how one should think about cooking. They are fascinating reference books about the basics and the primacy of fresh ingredients. The few simple recipes are delicious – try serving his puréed parsnips instead of the same-old mashed potatoes. Flemming, the Gramercy Tavern pastry chef, has written a wonderfully all-encompassing dessert cookbook. I am not much of a baker, but I have fun trying, and just reading this book is a delight. And fish fans can find no better recipes than those offered at Le Bernardin, lovingly introduced in the restaurant's cookbook.

In addition to these and several other cookbooks, I also look to three monthly magazines for recipes: Gourmet, Martha Stewart Living and Cook's Illustrated. Each month, I flip through the recipes and tear out any that appeal to me. While Gourmet and Living can be hit or miss – sometimes I go months without tearing anything out while other times I tear out what seems like half the magazine – every issue of Cook's Illustrated is terrific. Every other month, CI has interesting recipes as well as helpful hints about kitchen gadgets, cookware and grocery store items. The recipes are particularly interesting because the authors explain the trial-and-error process leading up to the published recipe, explaining why certain ideas worked and others didn't.

When it comes time for me to throw a dinner party, I sit down with my stack of torn out recipes and a pile of my cookbooks, and start looking at recipe after recipe. I typically serve five courses – salad, soup, pasta, main dish, and dessert, plus one or two hors d'oeuvres. Usually, I start off with one item already in mind. Perhaps I have been dying to make a particular pasta or fish dish that I recently cut out or haven't made in years, or maybe one of my guests made a special request. With that dish in mind, I match other courses around it, looking for complementary, yet different, flavors and textures. And, of course, the time of year will help me make selections; I try to use in-season produce, and people's moods are different depending on the weather. No one wants comfort food in August.

Also important in the selection process is finding recipes that can be made, at least in part, in advance – or if any work is required at the last minute, it is not too complicated. Indeed, (relative) simplicity is the common feature of all of the cookbooks I love and the recipes I cut out. In fact, those cookbooks with recipes that are just too complicated, but nevertheless seem to offer delicious results as shown by beautiful pictures end up on my coffee table. There, they start interesting discussions about cooking, cookbooks, recipes, and entertaining.

Raise Your Hand..... Who Hates Mosquitoes?

A front porch is like a warm embrace inviting visitors into the heart of the home. It is where we share a balmy evening dinner with friends, where a porch swing beckons a first kiss, or where a boy might share a rainy summer day with a puppy. But the peace is shattered when we hear that familiar high-pitched buzz of persistent mosquitoes. We've spent so much effort adorning our lovely open porches and when we refuse the eye-sore of permanent screening, we ask, "What else can we do to protect ourselves from the nasty blood suckers that hunt us?"

A temperate winter has not produced the sustained cold that seasonally reduces mosquito populations. This year might prove to be a very bad year for these disease-carrying micro-monsters. Mosquito control has become big business, offering products with varying degrees of effectiveness. People will try just about anything short of napalm for relief. We would like to share a few alternatives you can use to protect yourselves.

Remove Standing Water

The single best way to reduce mosquito populations is to remove standing water where mosquitoes breed. The trick is to find these hidden "love shacks." While a half-filled trashcan lid or wheelbarrow might be obvious suspects, many forget the more obscure sources of standing water. Lawn depressions, rain gutters, and matted leaves are often overlooked. All that is required is the tiniest pool of water for mosquitoes to multiply.

Mosquito-eating Fish

One weapon in the fight against mosquitoes may be as close as the pond in your backyard. The idea is simple. Lure female mosquitoes to a controlled breeding ground, allow them to lay their eggs and let fish eat the eggs before they hatch. Gambusia affinis, also known as mosquito fish, can eat up to 100 larvae each day. They can make a big difference in a small pond or water garden. Gambusia are related to and look very much like guppies and may be purchased in some pet stores. Goldfish, koi, and green mollies are also suitable to some degree.

Natural Insecticides

To ensure that you kill all the larvae, you may use a natural insecticide called Bacillus thuringiensis israelensis "Bti" that is produced by a bacterium. Bti kills just mosquitoes and flies, is non-toxic and should not hurt fish, beneficial insects such as honeybees or butterflies, people, pets, fish, or plants. Common names under which Bti is sold include Bactimos, Teknar, Vectobac and Mosquito Dunks.

Mosquito Curtains

Nothing is more effective than a physical barrier to separate you from mosquitoes. Mosquito curtains are a removable and washable alternative to permanent screening. Originally designed for upscale homes, they are elegant, seamless and attractive, yet are much more affordable than traditional screening. They are offered in various colors such as white, ivory and black as well as a "no-see-um" mesh for coastal sand flies. A typical 40 ft. porch cost $320 and may be hung using a variety of attachment methods, including curtain tracking similar to what is used for hospital privacy curtains.

Homemade Remedies

Our favorite homemade remedy is a very simple and inexpensive "plate trap." Fill a white dinner plate with water, a few drops of Lemon Joy dishwashing soap, and swirl. Set a few traps outside and count your dead. The mosquitoes are attracted to both the white color and lemon scent. As they land to lay their eggs they get stuck in the soapy emulsion and cannot escape. In an informal field test, five of these plate traps killed as many mosquitoes as an expensive one-acre propane trap for a fraction of a penny.

Propane Traps

Propane traps kill mosquitoes. However, at an initial price tag of $400 and $30 per month for propane and lure replacements, they can be costly and a hassle to operate. Often they attract mosquitoes from a broader area than you wish to control. And while your neighbors will appreciate your good deeds, mosquito populations may not be reduced as quickly as you might hope.

Mosquito Misting Systems

Mosquito misting systems are certainly the new rage among upscale homes that can afford the relatively high installation and maintenance cost. A word of caution, though, as some manufacturers have come under scrutiny for misleading advertising claiming that the chemicals are completely safe. While the headline insecticide may be harmless, it is sometimes supplemented with dangerous ingredients. One need only read the WARNING label to assess the dangers of this system.

For more information, go to www.mosquitocurtains.com, or call Kurt Johnson at 866-622-0916. Watch HGTV on March 29 for a segment featuring this product.

NORTH FORK WATER

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

Things are changing in Sag Harbor. Two of the town's commercial sites are now being revamped, refaced and rebuilt. In the just the past few months, the Bulova Watchcase Factory sold to a major residential developer for $16 million and now the old Rocco's, known as 21 Water Street, will possibly turn condo, or some type of multi-family residential housing. 21 Water Street, a night club on the harbor side of town, was a constant irritation to residents. The factory on the other side of town was slowly deteriorating. The club that received a long list of complaints and citations during its run has finally officially changed hands and the new owners are in the process of planning and seeking approval to build residential condominiums or apartment rentals. They propose luxury units that will have a pool on the grounds and one on the rooftop as well. In a town where parking is already more than tight, ample parking is a concern for the waterfront condo project. The construction alone is expected to cost an estimated $3 million. Village officials will consider the plans carefully for both projects, keeping the town residents in mind. The new structure at Water Street is proposed to be 30,000 sq ft and will require as many as 20 parking spaces if rental apartments go up and up to 40 if it is regulated as a condominium site.

In Montauk, Eothen, better known as the Church Estate, has made news again. Last week it was reported that veteran broker Tina Fredericks of Tina Fredericks Real Estate in East Hampton now has the listing.

When I spoke to Ms. Fredericks, she explained that the owner, Paul Morrissey, to whom she sold the house to along with the late Andy Warhol more than 30 years ago for a mere $225,000, has simply decided to make it an open listing. This means that it is anyone's sale, including hers. Tina, known throughout the Hamptons for many years as the "realtor to the stars," sold the 5 building oceanfront compound on more than 5 acres when her friend from New York, artist Andy Warhol, wanted to take a look at East End properties. Tina drove him out to the unique property in Montauk when he seemed bored by all the other properties in the Hamptons. Andy fell in love with Montauk and its quirky theme motels, she said. During its heyday, the Warhol Compound became one of the most legendary estates that the East End has ever seen, hosting royalty, countless celebrities, artists and literary figures in the early 70s. The property has been on the market a few years now, shifting from broker to broker. None of the brokers listing the very extraordinary oceanfront property have had any luck so far. So yes, there is a chance the original broker will find that very unique buyer just as she did years back. While brokers wait for the right buyer, the estate has often been rented to a number high profile celebrities and other prominent individuals who are attracted by the low profile seclusion that its 100 acres of surrounding preserve can provide. Its price is still holding at $50 million.

Just where Lake Agawam meets the ocean sits Longview, a new traditional 12,000 sq ft Gin Lane mansion in Southampton on a 2.5 acre estate. It has 7 en-suite style bedrooms, 8.5 baths, garden room and library, and multiple fireplaces. There is an indoor pool and spa, a screening room and separate staff quarters. It has sweeping views of Lake Agawam to the rear of the house and the frontage on Gin Lane is sealed with a tall hedgerow and gated for privacy. It is listed with Allan M. Schneider Associates in Southampton. Although the price is not advertised, estates of its size and locale can commonly range anywhere from $30 to $35 million.

Inspirations by Emily J Weitz

Your Kidney and Liver

I was recently taking the glorious Fang-Wah bus from New York to Boston, and in one weekend I had the pleasure of two McDonalds Value Meals. There was no choice. On the 5 hour trip, the bus made one stop, and I had to choose between Mickey D's and a giant tub of popcorn. The popcorn was unusual for a rest stop, and thus tempting, but popcorn is no substantial dinner. On the surface, those McNuggets actually seemed like the healthy option.

Let me tell you: 20 chicken McNuggets in one weekend ravaged my system. Additionally, after the first ten McNuggets and prior to the second ten McNuggets, I indulged in about a thousand cocktails. When I stepped off the Fung Wah on Canal Street late Sunday night, I felt like a lead weight was curling up at the bottom of my digestive track. I had to cleanse my system, but first I had to figure out where in my system the blockage was. As I compiled information about how crap (sorry, I don't know what else to call it) accumulates in your system, the significance of the kidney and the liver became more and more clear. They are the chambermaids of the body. When you trash the place without regard, those two reliable organs roll in with their carts loaded with cleaning supplies. They work hard to keep your system from bathing in the filth that many of us are constantly ingesting, whether it's because we enjoy it or because we sometimes lack options.

The kidneys: two fist-sized organs that take out the trash in the liquid form of urine. Depending on your diet and body type, you produce between 20 and 48 ounces of urine per day. Through the urine, your body is eliminating waste products, regulating the body's content of sodium, potassium, calcium, and magnesium, and regulating the body's acid/base balance. It is also involved in the production of red blood cells and helps control blood pressure. These are all vital functions. To assist kidney function and keep that chambermaid on call, dandelion root and parsley are both effective. Yogi brand tea makes an excellent detoxifying blend, packed with dandelion root, to stimulate the kidney's healthy function.

The liver is the other boss in the waste management department of your body. It is the largest internal organ. The liver stores and processes foods in your body. It also creates bile, which is necessary for the digestion of fats (McNuggets). The liver helps to excrete harmful substances that you have chosen to ingest, consciously or not, removing them from the bloodstream, in effect protecting you from yourself. When you take medicine, it is essential that the liver step in and regulate. You don't want foreign drugs lingering in your bloodstream after they've done their duty. About 80% of the medicine a person takes is removed by the liver or changed by it into a form that can be excreted by the kidneys. Thus, these two chambermaids often work together in tag-team fashion. Alcohol is also modified by the liver before it is removed from the body. To support liver function, the Chinese herb Fo Ti has been used for centuries.

A very simple yoga posture that helps stimulate both the kidneys and the liver is the spinal twist. Sit on the floor with your back straight. Lift your right leg into your arms and cradle it like a baby. The right foot rests in the left elbow crease, the right knee in the right elbow crease. As you cradle the leg back and forth, you will feel the right hip opening. Then place your right foot outside your left thigh or knee. Inhale and reach up to the sky, then reach your right arm around your right knee.

Place your left hand behind you, if it's comfortable. Look over your left shoulder and breathe. Take about five deep breaths here and then switch sides and repeat.

You can do a number on your liver and kidneys by eating a lot of saturated fat or drinking alcohol excessively. But in the McWorld in which we live, these things sometimes happen. When you do overdo it, those reliable chambermaids sometimes need a little jumpstart to get going again. Try some of these detoxifying herbs or postures to get them back on the job.

These herbs and postures are suggested to help keep these vital organs healthy. If you have a disease or feel you have damaged your kidney or liver in some way, please seek medical advice before embarking on any new programs.

New Cosmetic Procedures In Long Island

Have you ever wanted to know more about the cosmetic procedures they talk about on Oprah? On Tuesday, March 21st at 7 p.m. Dr. Alexander Covey of East End Laser Care will present a FREE SEMINAR and share the latest secrets of cosmetic surgery with you. Dr. Covey has been providing cosmetic procedures to the people of Long Island since 1988 and has been repeatedly named "One of the Top Doctors in New York" by the Castle Connolly Guide.

At the seminar, Dr. Covey will discuss everything from the latest breakthrough treatment Mesotherapy, a non-surgical technique to melt away fat, cellulite and unwanted inches, and Thermage, the amazing non-surgical skin tightening procedure used to tighten sagging skin on your face, neck, and other parts of your body, such as your arms, legs, abdomen and buttocks, to state-of-the-art Laser Treatments for "lines and wrinkles, acne and acne scarring, brown spots, facial veins, rosacea, and stretch marks."

Learn how exciting new "Filler Facelifts" restore volume and fullness, eliminate facial lines, and even reshape your nose using Botox, Collagen, Restylane, Radiesse and other natural fillers. Find out how Laser Hair Removal can permanently reduce unwanted hair. He will also tell you about Glo™ Minerals, the advanced mineral makeup used by celebrities such as Geena Davis, Holly Hunter, and Jane Seymour, and the official makeup of the 75th Annual Academy Awards now available in our offices.

You will meet patients who have had remarkable results and find out how cosmetic treatments can help you look better and feel better. In short, this is your chance to find out more about what's new in the world of cosmetic procedures.

All seminar attendees will receive FREE Gifts and Special Discounts. There will also be drawings for FREE Cosmetic Treatments, a FREE Glo™ Minerals makeup application and a FREE Vacation for 2.

Call (631) 878-9200 NOW to register. PRE-REGISTRATION IS NECESSARY. (Last time many people had to be turned away). This seminar will take place at The Inn at East Wind at 5720 Route 25A in Wading River and will begin at 7 p.m. Refreshments will be served.

We are asking for a donation of non-perishable food which will be contributed to the Family Service League which has been helping underprivileged children and families on Long Island since 1926.

NEW YEAR, SAME MISSION

Dear Dan,

In recent weeks, people in our community have made many New Year's resolution from losing weight to staying in better touch with friends and family members. This year, we are asking people to add one more thing to their list of resolutions: working to end domestic violence.

I hope you will consider devoting a portion of your column to domestic violence, rape and sexual assault and discuss the steps people in our community can take to help end abuse and support victims/survivors. Ending violence in our community is possible, but it requires a commitment from every one of us.

The Retreat staff is available to talk knowledgeably and powerfully about the impact that domestic violence, rape and sexual assault has on our community and the steps that community members can take to prevent it from reaching our next generation.

This issue is especially pressing this year, because in December Congress reauthorized the "Violence Against Women Act." However, in 2006, we need lawmakers to fully fund all of the programs in the new bill.

As you know, domestic violence, rape and sexual assault is a serious problem in our community and country.

If you are interested in learning more about how you can help Retreat in putting an end to this problem, please contact us at 631-329-4298 or log onto our website at:

Thank you for your consideration.

Karen Martin, Ph.D.
Clinical Director
East Hampton

SLIPPERY THOUGHT

Dear Dan,

Regarding your February 3rd article, "1,2, Oops, 3", I just wanted to agree with your findings. For four winters I have had two deer visit my front yard about twice a month. They never nibble on anything; they just walk on by and leave my Lhasa Apso in a state of delirium.

This winter, however...three deer at a clip! They appear to be the same height and age, and they are most definitely a pack of three. Where do deer pick up a third? Craig's List? And what does this pattern indicate for our eel? Will there be two eels this summer? Perhaps even three? Heaven forbid!

Cindy Greate

I can't even imagine three eels. -DR

BUILDING CHARACTER

Dear Dan,

We need your help to recruit and retain EMS volunteers for fire departments and ambulance/emergency medical services. Can your business provide a special perk to our EMS volunteers? A special discount, a complimentary dessert with dinner, a free tank of gas, for instance?

Your Chamber, working with the other Southampton Town Chambers, will compile the offers geographically in a flyer and distribute them to EMS. To take advantage of your offer, EMS personnel must show their current EMS I.D. card.

Please Fax your information to Millie Fellingham at 631-283-8707. Include the name of your business, street address, phone and a description of your offer.

Thank you very much.

Millie Fellingham,
Executive Director
Southampton Chamber of Commerce

ROUND PEG IN A SQUARE HOLE

Dear Dan,

They call it the Hub City because if you look at it on a road map it looks like the hub of a wagon wheel. Even I know that and I'm from New York City and did attend Curry College in Milton, Mass.

Maybe your reference was in jest? Anyway great job on the paper I read it every week

.Brendan Carobene
Via e-mail

It's only half a hub. And with the Big Dig they are dismantling the ring road. -DR

LISTEN UP

Dear Dan,

How can we as American citizens meekly allow the president's power grab? The domestic spying program is a dragnet that has led to innocent Americans being spied upon. The Bush administration insists that the illegal wiretapping program be only applied to suspected terrorists. Yet, both the New York Times and the Washington Post have reported that the program is a fishing expedition that often leads to wrongful invasiveness.

On Monday, the attorney general would not confirm that the program didn't eavesdrop on innocent Americans. And congressional opposition is bipartisan. Despite Karl Rove's desire to turn this into an election issue, even threatening to take electoral revenge on Republicans who break with the president, Republicans and Democrats have questioned his authority. As Congresswoman Wilson points out, the administration's reluctance to come clean, "has deepened (her) apprehension about whom the agency is monitoring and why." She is, in fact, the only female Republican veteran. She, too, broke ranks and has insisted on a congressional inquiry, which began on Wednesday, February 8.

Don't you think it would be a good idea to call Senators Schumer and Clinton and Tim Bishop, our US Congressman, to let them know that we continue to VALUE our PRIVACY rights in a FREE Democracy post 9/11?

Deanna Alpert, LCSW
Southold
Via e-mail

They know. -DR

Police Blotter

Bye Bye iPod

A man in Noyac reported to police that somebody stole his Apple iPod, worth about $350. It was stolen from his home while he was hosting a party. Police investigating the incident asked the man what kind of music was on the iPod. He replied that there was a lot of Yanni, M.C. Hammer and New Kids on The Block. Police advised the man to stop throwing parties.

Hot On The Case

A man in Hampton Bays reported to police that someone broke into his home and stole a watch, and also rummaged through several dresser drawers and closets in his bedroom. Police at the crime scene found bicycle tire tracks and boot footprints in the snow around the house believed to have come from the perp. Unfortunately, the snow melted before they could investigate further.

Grocery Thief

A woman shopping for groceries in East Hampton tried to leave the store with her fill of food without paying for it. When she got to the door she was chased by the store manager and dropped her bags, filled with over one hundred dollars worth of chopped meat, on the ground and ran. She was not caught, but she did not get away with anything. The store manager said that the woman could not come back to the store. He also mentioned that there is now a sale on chopped meat.

Gas Thief

A woman reported to police that someone had stolen her credit card from her purse and charged $37.50 at a gas station in Hampton Bays. When the policeman wrote up the report he was quoted saying, "That's nothing. My truck costs $70 to fill up."

Rob This Plate

A woman in Sag Harbor reported to police that her license plate had been stolen from the front end of her car while it was parked in front of her house. Police were less surprised by the crime once they found out that the missing plate was a vanity license plate that reads, "ROBMYPL8."

High Pitch

Ten lights were smashed at a Montauk bar after a karaoke night. The culprits that broke the lights were caught on video surveillance cameras and the videos were shown to police. Upon reviewing the video, police noticed that none of the rowdy group actually threw anything at the light bulbs. Police are looking for a man with a very high-pitched voice.

Uprooted, Undamaged

A woman reported to police that somebody uprooted her mailbox and threw it out into the street outside of her home in East Hampton. The woman examined the mailbox and found no damage to it, then proceeded to put it back. Police are hoping that mailbox javelin is going to replace the time tested pastime of vandals, mailbox baseball. As it would appear that mailbox javelin does not cause much damage.

Gurto & Gurto Southampton Village

In the heart of Southampton Village, nestled on a beautiful 1.5 acre lot, Gurto & Gurto Builders has created a 3,000 sq. ft. traditional home - one of the very few homes built with this level of craftsmanship. This seven bedroom, eight bath home includes a fireplace in all major common areas. The 1,800 sq. ft. third story is exquisitely detailed and can serve as a home office, gym, additional playroom, or all of the above. Included are wood paneling, vaulted ceilings and a mahogany library. This two kitchen home has a 12 by 14 professional kitchen. It includes duplicate vintage appliances for the main master or home cook, along with a second kitchen which opens up to a dining porch. The entire property has been lined with perimeter specimen trees and perennial gardens. It includes a 50 foot Gunite pool, and a pool house with every convenience. Ready for Spring 2006.

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

Simply call 1-877-794-5363 to request this informative free report.
